Malleable, adj

- 1. a. Esp. of metal: capable of being hammered or pressed out of shape without a tendency to return to the original shape or to fracture.
 - b. [Probably after literal meaning of post-classical Latin malleare.] Of stone: capable of being dressed with a hammer. Obs.
- 2. *gen. Capable of being fashioned or adapted; adaptable, pliable.

From OED online, June 2008 revision.

Objectives

- Additional representations / transformations.
 - A particular version is eventually ill-suited
- Leverage “user” knowledge / contribution.
 - Based on the idea of gifts and giving
 - The Gift by Marcel Mauss
 - The Cathedral and the Bazaar by Eric Raymond
 - Developing or finding new meaning
- Use “off the shelf” wiki technology
 - Determine what elements resonate
 - Capture changes / evolution over time
- (Not worried about EAD per se.)

Theory of Structuration

- By Anthony Giddens, Constitution of Society
- Structuration is a process and duality of
 - Agency (user) within Structure (practice)
 - Recursive with changes
- Agency (man or machine) able to interpret
- Structure is practice
 - Malleability facilitates additional interpretation(s) or transformations and becomes overt practice

Implementation of a “Commons”

- Archives / Guides are non-rival goods
 - “A” guide doesn’t preclude “B” guide
 - Guides with specific purpose / theme (?)
- Use Off the Shelf Technology
 - MVS is using Atlassian’s Confluence Wiki
 - Not open source, but low cost (ditched MediaWiki)
 - Linking, tagging, adjacency, referring, provenance / change tracking, rearrangement, visualization
 - Particular interest in non-archival application
 - Wider development, broader reach, integration

What did I do ?

- Established a Finding Aid “space” in wiki
 - Developed Prototype layout
 - Added in elements of functionality / features
 - Will test which elements (if any) useful
- Example: T.C.H. Jacobs Literary Papers
 - Held by Pennsylvania State University
 - Original Guide won 2006 MARAC award
 - Collection not available in digital form

Biographical Note

T.C.H. (Thomas Curtis Hicks) Jacobs, was a prolific English pulp fiction author of Westerns, romances, true crime stories, and spy and detective fiction. He was born in, Plymouth, Devonshire, England, on 30 December 1899, to Mary and Robert Jacobs, a printer and paper merchant, and educated in a local Plymouth grammar school. Jacobs wrote his first published work for the Western Weekly News at age sixteen.

Jacobs served in the British Army Infantry from 1917 to 1921. In 1918, he was wounded in action and taken prisoner of war. He escaped and was demobilized in 1921 as a second lieutenant. After the war, Jacobs joined the English civil service as a revenue investigating officer. In 1925, he married Muriel Newbury.

In 1928, Jacobs sold his first novel, an "economic necessity," he later recalled, as a serial published by A. J. Rhodes. During his 23 years with the Inland Revenue, Jacobs wrote at night. From 1950 to 1976, he wrote full time. He began by writing many short stories for boys' magazines, but as the popularity of short stories for boys' magazines and fiction declined around 1950, he branched into non-fiction writing with a trilogy on the study of murder.

In 1953, Jacobs became a founding member of the Crime Writers' Association; in 1960-1961 he served as its chairman. His other memberships included The Society of Civil Service Authors, the Press Club, Radio and Television Guild, Society of Authors, and the Bexley Rotary Club. In 1939, Jacobs attained the distinction of being the first English civil servant to have a film made from one of his novels, Traitor Spy.

For much of his life, Jacobs apparently made his home in Bexley, Kent, England.

He died in London in 1976; his obituary was listed under the pseudonym because...

Series III. Research

Research, 1950-1970.

This series contains resources kept by T.C.H. Jacobs to support his writing. This series was created from loose items among his papers. It includes pages from medical journals, crime-related information from the Crime Writers' Association, course materials about writing for television, and clippings from British magazines and newspapers documenting highly publicized crime and spy scandals of the 1950s and 1960s. Reflecting Jacobs' interests, these resources provide glimpses into the sources of Jacobs' inspiration and knowledge in developing his stories.

The series is arranged chronologically.

Default sort is chronological, end of folder title.
