

The Museum of Modern Art

Museum Archives Access Policy

1. The Museum Archives seeks to make records available for research use to the fullest extent. It is recognized that some records must be restricted to protect the legitimate interests of the Museum and the privacy of individuals. Those materials that must be closed temporarily in accordance with Museum policy or donor restrictions will be reviewed from time to time and opened as soon as the need for restriction has passed.
2. Unprocessed materials are not available to outside researchers, but may be consulted by staff members in the course of their research for the Museum.
3. All processed records may be used by outside researchers. (Selected records, less than ten years old, may require the consent of the department head and/or Museum Archivist.)
4. Certain information, such as condition, prices, and current insurance values of works of art are not available to outside users. Records pertaining to anonymous donors, fundraising, personnel, and Board of Trustee and Committee meetings are restricted.
5. Records are arranged, described, and stored according to generally accepted archival standards; depending upon demand and potential research value, selected material may be processed in greater or lesser detail.
6. Users are informed of the Museum's archival resources through finding aids available on the Museum Archives website at: <http://www.moma.org/research/archives.html>. Certain Record Groups are available on microfilm through the Archives of American Art, both at their research centers and through international inter-library loan.
7. Permission to study archival material does not include the right to photocopy or publish the contents.
8. Written permission must be obtained from the Museum Archives to publish reproductions of documents or substantial quotes from them. Permission is contingent on the researcher agreeing to indemnify The Museum of Modern Art for any loss, damage or expense to third parties arising from such publication. The Museum of Modern Art makes no representation that it is the owner of any copyright or other literary property in research materials made available for use. The researcher is responsible for determining the nature of any rights and the ownership or interest therein, obtaining permission to publish or use, and determining the nature of any possible liabilities that may result from publication or use.

In giving permission to reproduce archival materials The Museum of Modern Art does not surrender its own rights to publish the materials or to grant permission to others to publish them; nor does the Museum assume any responsibility for infringement of copyright.
