Stake Your Claim in SAA

As I write this, the Denver annual meeting is barely a month behind us. To say it was a successful meeting in all respects may be an understatement. Both program and host committees deserve our congratulations and thanks. One of the highlights for me was the opportunity to attend the new member breakfast. Nearly ninety first-timers attended the breakfast, which was an amazing turnout.

In past sessions we have tried to explain the organization and give tips on how to get things done in SAA and how to get involved. All good and useful topics, but perhaps dry fare for breakfast. We decided to try something different this time. Membership Committee Chair Scott Schwartz, President Tom Hickerson, and I each talked about becoming involved in SAA and recalled attending our first annual meetings. Without any scripting, Scott, Tom and I all seemed to have a similar story to tell. We had each gone to our first meeting not knowing anyone, but in the course of the conference, we met one or more people who started to open up the world of archives and SAA to us.

In my case, I struck up a conversation with a quiet gentleman named William Wilson at the reception that preceded the 1976 Washington meeting’s annual banquet. Mr. Wilson, I discovered, was a scientist with the National Bureau of Standards. He artificially aged paper to test its permanence and durability. I was fascinated.

He asked me with whom I was sitting at dinner. I knew no one, so I had no plans. He invited me to join his group. I learned that they were presenting an all-day workshop the following morning on the new (to me) field of preservation. Later I realized I was dining with George Cunha, Richard Smith, and several other pioneers of preservation. I came back to Penn State a preservation convert, and my education as an archivist had begun.

The message we all wanted to communicate to the new members was: SAA is your organization, go out and introduce yourself and start meeting your peers and colleagues. You’ll be pleasantly surprised at how welcome they’ll make you feel. By the end of the conference I had talked with a number of these new members and the feedback was good. “It worked,” they said, “I met people from my local area or from the same type of archives who can help me out. I’m now on a committee, working group, or a program proposal for the 2001 meeting in Washington, DC. I’m involved. I’m on my way.”

In late September I had the opportunity to share their experience, to be a first-time meeting attendee. I journeyed to Seville, Spain, to represent you at the 14th International Congress on Archives, sponsored by the International Council of Archives (ICA).

Thanks to funding from the National Council for Library and Information Sciences, your president last year and this has represented SAA at ICA meetings. Karen Benedict also serves as SAA’s official representative to ICA’s Section on Professional Associations. The International Congress is held once every four years; in the off years, the president attends the meeting of CITRA, the International Conference of the Round Table of Archives.

You may think this is quite a nice perk, but it’s a working event for the SAA president. You have to experience this meeting to grasp the respect that your Society is accorded in the world. As the largest professional archival association outside of China, our presence and participation is warmly welcomed. I was frequently told by colleagues from Europe, Asia, Africa and Latin America that we have so much to offer to the worldwide profession, they are glad to see us becoming more involved.

Certainly, our most visible presence at the meeting was the SAA book shop, under the capable management of Teresa Brinati. We had sent a large number of volumes with Teresa and all were sold, with orders taken for more. There is clearly a demand for SAA’s publications abroad and, in conversations with ICA leadership, I found there is more desire to bring our products onto the larger world stage and collaborate and coordinate on developing new publications to meet gaps in the literature.

Both Karen Benedict and I spent time with international archivists discussing the work of the International Records Management Trust (IRMT) and the World Bank. All who saw Ann Thurston’s plenary presentation in Denver on the work of the Trust in reaching out to Third World countries to help them reach basic standards in recordkeeping continued on page 39

The Society of American Archivists 64th annual meeting was held August 21-September 2, 2000, in Denver, the mile-high capital of Colorado. The Adam’s Mark Hotel, located on the picturesque 16th street mall, hosted more than 1,000 meeting attendees. The conference featured a rich and rewarding mix of stimulating activities. The week began with ten preconference workshops offering engaging educational opportunities for one and all, followed by 66 sessions on a variety of topics of interest to the profession. Distinguished plenary speakers included Maurice Banks of the U.S. Department of Transportation speaking on diversity; author and research scientist David M. Levy discussing what is a digital document; and Ann Thurston of the International Records Management Trust addressing the need to assist developing countries achieve basic standards in recordkeeping. Other highlights included an interesting mix of tours in and around the city, a fabulous evening reception at the Denver Public Library, the annual awards ceremony (see the following pages for details), the exciting International Archives and Technology Exposition boasting the latest in archival products and services, and lots of opportunities for members to network. Many thanks to the program and host committees, session and workshop presenters, vendors, meeting attendees and others for making this a successful and memorable conference....
Seven members were named Fellows of the Society of American Archivists on August 31, 2000, during an awards ceremony at SAA's 64th annual meeting in Denver. Bruce Ambacher, Jackie Dooley, Anne Gilliland-Swetland, Kristi Kiesling, Philip Mooney, Richard Szary, and Kenneth Thibodeau received the highest honor bestowed on individuals by SAA, thus joining 127 current members so honored. Established in 1957 and conferred annually, this distinction is awarded to a limited number of individuals for their outstanding contributions to the archival profession.

The Committee for the Selection of SAA Fellows evaluates nominees on the following criteria: appropriate academic education and professional and technical training; a minimum of seven years professional experience in any of the fields encompassed in the archival profession; writing of superior quality and usefulness in advancing SAA objectives; and contributions to the archival profession through work in and for SAA.

As specified by the SAA constitution, election as Fellow is by 75 percent vote of the Committee for the Selection of SAA Fellows. The committee consists of the five immediate past presidents of SAA and three Fellows selected by Council. The members this year were William J. Maher (chair), Luciana Duranti, Nicholas C. Burckel, Brenda Banks, Maygene Daniels, Timothy L. Ericson, William K. Vallach, and Elizabeth Yakel.

Following are citations given by presenters during the awards ceremony.

Bruce Ambacher

Bruce Ambacher has held a variety of positions at the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) since 1976, and he has been a member of SAA for more than 20 years. He has served both NARA and the profession exceptionally well. At NARA he has been recognized for exceptional service five separate times, including more recently in his current capacity as special assistant to the director of the Electronic and Special Media Records Services Division. While his publications include several historical pieces, his major research contributions have dealt with records management and electronic records. He has presented his research at a number of national and regional professional meetings, including SAA, ARMA, NAGARA, and MARAC. Within SAA Bruce has co-chaired both the host and program committees, and chaired sections on government records and acquisitions and appraisal. Bruce served as associate editor of the Mid-Atlantic Archivist and MARAC president, and he is currently treasurer of the National Archives Assembly, having served earlier as its vice president and president. He also teaches the "Administration of Archives and Manuscripts" course at George Mason University and is the electronic records instructor for the Modern Archives Institute.

In his electronic records role at NARA, Bruce has dealt with such sensitive issues as updating the FBI's records schedule, evaluation of CIA records, preservation of the PROFS case electronic records, and coordination of the agency's participation in the Federal Geographic Data Committee. Bruce is also contributing to an effort to develop an ISO standard for an Open Archival Information System.

For his past and continuing contributions to SAA and the profession, we are proud to welcome Bruce Ambacher as a Fellow of the Society of American Archivists.

Jackie Dooley

Many of us were probably first introduced to Jackie Dooley through her 1988 article "An Introduction to Authority Control for Archivists" (Archival Informatics Newsletter and Technical Reports, part 2, summer 1988), a cogent and clear explanation, as one supporter wrote, "of a critically important concept [which] helped many an archivist enter the world of online information retrieval with a real understanding of the power of indexing and shared vocabulary." As head of Special Collections and University Archives at the University of California, Irvine and throughout her career, Jackie has "energized the development of national standards for intellectual access to visual materials, archives and special collections." She has argued persuasively in papers, articles, and committee meetings for archivists to provide more subject indexing, for standardized form and genre terms, and authority-controlled headings so that varied user communities could locate relevant research resources in both published and unpublished sources. She has cajoled her colleagues to improve descriptive approaches and preached an adherence to national standards.

Anne Gilliland-Suwetland

It is with great happiness that I announce the selection of Anne Gilliland-Suwetland as a Fellow of the Society of American Archivists (SAA). Anne’s contributions to the archival profession have been both varied and significant. In the areas of research and writing, professional service and teaching, she has helped to move the archival profession forward and better prepared to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century.

Anne is a leading researcher in the area of electronic records and digital technologies. From examining electronic conferencing, to designing an expert system for the appraisal of electronic mail, to examining ways in which archival materials could be presented on the World Wide Web to enhance instruction in the K-12 environment, to the current InterPARES (International Research on Permanent Authentic Electronic Records in Electronic Systems) project that addresses the problems of maintaining the authenticity of electronic records of enduring value over time, Anne has made significant contributions to the archival knowledge bases in the digital realm.

Professional service is a prominent feature on Anne’s résumé. She served on SAA Council and on numerous SAA committees; yet this only represents a small portion of her professional service. Anne is also active in regional organizations and has been a member of advisory and review committees for archives across the country. As in her research, Anne’s professional service has an international dimension. She was also selected by Monash University in Australia to be an international expert reviewer for the SPIRT (Recordkeeping Metadata Standards for Managing and Accessing Information Resources in Networked Environments Over Time for Government, Commerce, Social, and Cultural Purposes) research project.

Perhaps no area impacts the future of the archival profession more than teaching. First at the University of Michigan and since 1995 as an assistant professor at the University of California at Los Angeles, Anne has taught and helped to shape the next generation of archivists. Over the years, I have seen her interact with and encourage students not only to understand archival concepts, but also to challenge traditional paradigms. Following her example, many of Anne’s students are also professionally active and frequent contributors to archival publications.

A colleague noted “Anne may have begun her career in the Old World, but she has taken the New World by storm.” Anne’s energy has always impressed me, but when I think of her I often think of the other things she has shared with us: friendship, enthusiasm, and wry, insightful humor. It is a pleasure for me to be the first to officially congratulate Anne on her election as a Fellow of the Society of American Archivists.

—Elizabeth Yakel, University of Michigan

Kristi Kiesling

It is a special thrill for me to introduce Kristi Kiesling as a Fellow of the Society of American Archivists. I first met Kris in the late 1970s at the University of Minnesota’s Social Welfare History Archives, where we were both introduced to archival work. Later, after her graduate education at the University of Michigan, Kris successfully competed for one of the prized positions in American archives, that of head of the Department of Manuscripts and Archives at the Harry Ransom Humanities Research Center, University of Texas at Austin. Kris has built a truly impressive archival career and her contributions to the...
Philip Mooney

Philip Mooney is, in the words of one nomination supporter, "the business archivist's archivist. The archival program at the Coca-Cola Company is no archival theory; it is one of the most successful and long-running corporate archival programs in the country and a model to which most other business archivists aspire. Phil has built this program in an environment that is not known for supporting archival endeavors. That he has been managing this program in the private sector for 23 years is a testimony to his skill and talent."

In addition to building the program at Coca-Cola, Phil Mooney gives generously of his time, his energy, and his knowledge to colleagues in the profession. An SAA member since 1969, he served on the Archives and Society Task Force, and as one of the early leaders in the Business Archives Section he helped to make the section one of the most active and productive groups in the SAA. Phil has served on numerous program and local arrangements committees; chaired the Nominating Committee; and became an instrumental player in the formation and development of the Academy of Certified Archivists.

Phil's record of publication rivals or exceeds many of his peers based in academic settings. Most recently he has contributed chapters in Advocating Archives (SAA, 1994) and the Records of American Business (SAA, 1997). Over the years Phil's writing has reminded us that scholarship and academic values are not the only justifications for archives—concerns such as trademark, licensing, marketing, and the bottom line have their place as well.

To many, Phil Mooney is best known for his longstanding tenure as an instructor in the SAA workshop "Business Archives: The Basics and Beyond," which he began teaching in 1979. In this role he has helped to launch the careers of many business archivists. As one put it, "I have carried the lessons learned during the business archives workshop with me to the professional realm, and continue to draw upon them in my daily work."

As another supporter observed, "Phil Mooney is to business archives education what Cats was to Broadway, except that Phil has had a longer run!"

Perhaps his most important contribution has been, as one recent workshop student wrote, as a "welcoming," "affable," and "approachable" representative of SAA and the profession generally. One colleague who first joined SAA in the 1970s recalled, "As a new member...I was eager to participate in SAA activities, but was uncertain how to get involved. I recall Phil's encouraging and friendly introduction to SAA when we just happened to sit next to one another as a session. Since there was no briefing at that time for first-time attendees or new SAA members I was particularly grateful for this engaging description of the organization and how it worked."

So for these and other contributions, the SAA is very pleased to say "thanks" to Phil Mooney and welcome him as a Fellow of the Society of American Archivists.

Richard V. Szary

A most distinguished group of archivists has recognized Richard V. Szary for his consistent excellence as an archivist at the Smithsonian Institution and Yale University and as a seminal thinker and leader of the profession, who employs new technology to improve descriptive and user access. What is most notable, however, is the constant theme among his colleagues that Richard is “not one to seek or dominate the limelight, but he is always there, lending his expertise, supporting the work of others, and advancing our field.” Others note that “He focuses on actually solving complex, difficult issues of archival access, not on promoting his own persona, pronouncements, or predilections.” At the same time, Richard’s solid intellect and mode of analysis has enabled him to make visionary contributions to the development of descriptive practice, especially in the area of authority control, standards, and Encoded Archival Description.

Following Asian Studies graduate work at the University of Illinois, Richard worked from 1975 to 1988 at the Smithsonian Institution, first in the archives and then in the Office of Information Resource Management. At Yale University since 1988, Richard has earned a strong reputation as a leader and highly effective archivist. In a tough, competitive academic environment, Richard has obtained $1.5 million in institutional support to rebuild the Yale University Archives, no doubt through his quiet, persistent, and thoroughly professional advocacy for archives, heritage, and user services. A cosmopolitan roster of supporters of Szary’s nomination praised him for his visionary leadership in international description standards. Few would disagree with one reviewer’s comment that Richard’s work at Yale to be the most important of his many contributions to this profession. Through election to Fellow of the Society of American Archivists, we honor the model he provides of an intelligent, passionate, compassionate, and dedicated archivist who is indeed one of the “quiet giants” of the profession.

—William J. Maher, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign

Kenneth Thibodeau

I am honored to announce the election of a Fellow who has distinguished himself and our profession through his strategic vision and leadership in the effort to resolve critical issues in archival administration of electronic records. Kenneth Thibodeau began his career in 1971 as a teacher of the history of science and great books at the University of Notre Dame. In 1975 he joined the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) as an archivist in the original Machine-Readable Archives Division, which then was engaged in early efforts to manage digital data. From 1978 to 1988, he was responsible for records management at the National Institutes of Health and was involved in strategic planning for information resources there, an experience which gave him important practical knowledge of the needs and problems of creators and users of digital data.

In 1988, Ken returned to NARA as the new director of electronic records programs. Since then, he has had a key role in developing responses to key issues in the archival management of electronic records in the federal government and beyond. Under his leadership, the NARA Center for Electronic Records has formulated integrated solutions for tracking and preserving electronic records with permanent value. The Archival Preservation System, which evolved under his guidance, established a technically sophisticated means to preserve major data files that made it possible for NARA to successfully respond to critical legal requirements. The Center’s Electronic Records Inspection and Control System automated the verification process for accessing electronic data.

Beyond these accomplishments, Ken has served his profession through his tireless efforts to promote an understanding of electronic records in the larger archival community. He has sought opportunities to explain issues and strategies for managing electronic records—publishing widely and giving an astonishing 75 presentations during the past 12 years alone.

He has recognized the importance of electronic records in the international arena and used his knowledge and professional standing to advance discussion within the International Council on Archives. He has worked with designers of information systems to establish a broader understanding of archival requirements.

Ken is known for his generosity in sharing his knowledge, for his ability to present complex ideas with clarity, for his skill in working with his colleagues to accomplish practical goals to serve the American people. He is a model archivist in our complex new electronic world, and for this we are honored to name him a Fellow of the Society of American Archivists.

A Bird’s Eye View: Denver 2000

As an SAA member and participant in the 64th annual meeting of the association, X wanted to congratulate and praise your staff, the Program Committee and the Host Committee for the excellent conference in Denver. There was much that was noteworthy in my week-long SAA experience, including a rigorous but instructive EAD training workshop. But Maurice Banks’ presentation at the “Managing Diversity Plenary” was a highlight. I was glad to see that many participants did attend. As a Black American I hope that this was not a one-shot take on this subject, but is the beginning of a dialog that SAA will encourage in a variety of ways.

Sincerely,

AVRIL J. MADISON
Assistant University Archivist

And the 2000 SAA Awards Go To...

The Society of American Archivists recognized and celebrated outstanding archival achievements for calendar year 1999 at an awards ceremony on August 31, 2000, during its 64th annual meeting at the Adam’s Mark in Denver. Recipients of SAA-sponsored awards were selected by subcommittees of the Awards Committee, which was co-chaired by Nancy Boothe and Roland Baumann. SAA heartily congratulates all of the award winners.

Preservation Publication Award

This monograph allows nonspecialists to identify architectural drawing reproduction methods without access to chemical analysis, based on visual examination and a helpful flow chart. Identification of drawing media is often difficult but important for holdings management, proper cataloging, dating, and to make sure the drawings survive with appropriate maintenance and housing techniques.

Both authors are experienced professional conservators that have, with the support and advice of the Mertz Library, brought together a large body of information on architectural drawings that is critically important for the archivist and the conservator.

This 128-page manual covers commonly used architectural reproduction processes from 1860-1990. The forward by Lois Olcott Price puts the creation and need for architectural photoreproductions into an historical context. This is followed by a flowchart developed by Kissel and Vigneau to help the user identify individual print types using visual clues. Once tentatively identified, the flow chart directs the user to specific sections where each process is described. In addition, the appendices are rich in supplementary information.

The authors along with the Mertz Library have developed an innovative methodology that is easy to understand. This monograph is a major contribution to archival and preservation literature where there has been little published in this subject area. Judith Reed, conservator/librarian at the Mertz Library, received the award on behalf of the winners.

Philip M. Hamer and Elizabeth Hamer-Kegan Award

Honoring two SAA Fellows and former SAA presidents, the Philip M. Hamer and Elizabeth Hamer-Kegan Award recognizes an archivist, editor, group of individuals, or institution that has increased public awareness of a specific body of documents through compilation, transcription, exhibition, or public presentation of archives or manuscript materials for educational, instructional, or other public purpose. The award was established in 1973.

JEFFREY D. MARSHALL is the winner of the 2000 Hamer-Kegan Award for his publication, A War of the People: Vermont Civil War Letters, published by University Press of New England, which documents the lives and attitudes of rank-and-file Vermont soldiers. It portrays the concerns—large and small—of the men who fought that war and the time that served simultaneously as a backdrop to and chief participant in their affairs. A War of the People stands as an example of today’s best historiography—one that presents history in the context of real human lives. This book is also extraordinary because, throughout its pages, it alludes to a secondary cast of characters—the archival material Marshall labored over for four years. His exhaustive treatment of a vast amount of primary records, including over 9,000 letters, photographs, and artifacts, cannot but impress upon the reader the eloquence found in archival evidence. A noted archivist, Marshall provides extensive information about the record groups and repositories he consulted.

In the true spirit of the Hamer-Kegan Award, A War of the People engagingly draws attention to information available in archival materials and presents a public forum to celebrate history.

Waldo Gifford Leland Award

The Waldo Gifford Leland Award recognizes "writing of superior excellence and usefulness in the field of archival history, theory, or practice." Established in 1959, the Leland Award is named for one of America’s archival pioneers and SAA’s second president. The 2000 Leland Award goes to Charles Dollar for his fine monograph, Authentic Electronic Records: Strategies for Long-Term Access, published by Cohasset Associates, Inc. The work offers a clear and comprehensive look at the complex issues involved in providing continued access to archival electronic records.

Authentic Electronic Records succeeds on three important counts. First, its enlightened delineation of the concepts involved includes a first-rate "Technology Primer for Archivists and Records Managers." Second, it offers real solutions in the form of access strategies, best practices, and recommended guidelines that can be employed in a variety of institutional settings. And finally, it sets a research agenda for the future that will help strengthen our ability to manage the preservation of these records over time. Authentic Electronic Records is a timely work. Charles Dollar has moved this urgent conversation into the twenty-first century.

Certificate of Commendation

Members of the Leland Award subcommittee this year have taken the unusual step of awarding a special certificate of commendation to Patricia Kennedy Grimst of the Harvard Ukrainian Research Institute for her extraordinary achievement in bringing to publication the monumental two-volume work, Archives of Russia: A Directory and Bibliographic Guide to Holdings in Moscow and St. Petersburg. As editor of this English language edition, published by M.E. Sharpe, Grimsted has produced a comprehensive guide to the holdings of hundreds of repositories, public and private, in Russia’s two great cities.

With its exhaustive entries providing repository histories, narrative descriptions of holdings, indications of working conditions for researchers, and listings and descriptions of all available finding aids, the guide will serve scholars of Russia and her history for years to come. As one member of the Leland Award subcommittee noted: "It is almost superhuman to have collected this information about an archival system as large and as complex as Russia’s." And so for her superhuman achievement, we honor Patricia Grimsted with a SAA certificate of commendation.

Fellows’ Posner Award

In 1982, the Fellows of the Society of American Archivists established the Fellows’ Posner Award to recognize outstanding work dealing with some facet of archival administration, history, theory and/or methodology published in the latest volume of the American Archivist. The award is named for SAA Fellow and former president Ernst Posner. In evaluating volume 61 of the journal, this year’s awards subcommittee has selected Peter J. Wosh’s review essay, “Going Postal,” as the award winner.

The witty and wise essay places the contemporary information revolution in the historical context of the political wrangling, the public debate, the consumer controversy and the corporate rivalry displayed in the growth of mail service in the United States. He draws a variety of provocative parallels between the postal service and the Internet. The postal delivery of mail order catalogs in the post-Civil War era created a ‘virtual marketplace without walls.’ The nineteenth century Comstock Laws to eliminate obscene materials from the mails are not unlike the current Congressional efforts to curb pornographic Web sites. Perhaps the most attention-grabbing analogy is the comparison of the antebellum white woman and “the lush roundness and ornate letters of [her] Spencerian script” with the contemporary lisserv lurkers and chatroom addicts. Both the postal service and the Internet have provoked debates over equal access to information, the relationship between private enterprise and public policy, the free flow of information, and the creation of "virtual communities." As he examines the information policy issues for the nineteenth century communication systems with the similarities to those of the twenty-first century, for Peter, the past is indeed prologue.

Oliver Wendell Holmes Award

The 2000 Oliver Wendell Holmes Award is presented to Professor ZHOU XIAOMU from Renmin University in Beijing, China. The award, established in 1979, enables foreign archivists already in the United States or Canada to attend the SAA annual meeting. Prof. Zhou is an associate professor in the School of Information and Library Science at Renmin University, where she teaches and conducts research on information management systems and computer application technology. She has written extensively in these areas and has translated several essential English language works on electronic records into Chinese. She has also designed and developed information management systems for several corporations in China's burgeoning enterprise sector and for government agencies and organizations.

Xiaomu currently is a visiting scholar at the University of Michigan, headquartered at the Bentley Historical Library, when she isn’t auditing classes at Michigan’s School of Information. Her purpose in coming to the U.S. was primarily to develop an electronic records management curriculum, which she will teach at Renmin University beginning in 2001. Xiaomu’s knowledge of and skills in management information systems and computer applications have allowed her to contribute to the work of the Bentley Library and she has shared her expertise with staff and students alike. While learning much about archival principles and techniques in America, she has also become a tremendous resource on international practices on electronic records. An acute observer of educational methods in America, she plans to incorporate the best of what she has observed into her own teaching of graduate students at Renmin University. In honoring Prof. Zhou with the Holmes Award, we also honor SAA Fellow and former SAA president Oliver Wendell Holmes, an activist in international archival affairs and a promoter of SAA’s international outreach efforts.

Theodore Calvin Pease Award

The 2000 Theodore Calvin Pease Award winner, entitled "Analysis of Remote Reference Correspondence at a Large Academic Manuscripts Collection," was written by KRISTIN E. MARTIN as a master’s paper for Professor Helen Tibbo at the School of Information and Library Science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The paper analyzes letter, telephone, fax, and e-mail correspondence sent to the Southern Historical Collection at Chapel Hill for the years 1995 and 1999. The study shows how changing technologies are affecting not only the quantity of the remote reference inquiries received by archival repositories, but also their nature. The Pease Award Committee was impressed with the research design and data gathering system used in the paper. It addresses an issue of high relevance for the archival community, and its research design can serve as a helpful model for future user studies. The study evidences the careful scholarship, clear presentation, and thoughtful analysis that make it a worthy recipient of the Pease Award.

Established in 1987, the Theodore Calvin Pease Award is named for the first editor of the American Archivist and is given to the best student paper as judged by the current editor of the American Archivist and two individuals with expertise in archival research and literature. Kristen’s paper will be published in the winter/spring 2001 issue of the American Archivist.

Colonial Dames Scholarship Award

The Colonial Dames Scholarship award enables two young professionals each year to attend the Modern Archives Institute at the National Archives. The applicants must have been employed less than two years in the profession and be an employee of an archival institution or agency with a fair percentage of its holdings from the colonial period, predating 1825. Established in 1974, the award is funded by the Colonial Dames of America [Chapter III, Washington, D.C.].

The awardee chosen for the institute’s spring cycle was CHRISTINE MORELAND-BRUHNKE. Christine has a bachelor of arts in anthropology and works at the Rio Grande Historical Collections where she is writing and revising collection finding aids for the Online Archive of New Mexico. Christine was unable to be with us today but wanted to thank us for the opportunity to attend the institute.

G. MARIE ROGERS is the Kentucky Guide Program Coordinator at the Kentucky State Archives. She received her undergraduate degree from Berea College and an M.L.S. from the University of Kentucky. Marie had the good fortune of attending the institute’s winter cycle during one of the few snow storms that blanketed the Washington Metropolitan area. She told the SAA awards subcommittee that she enjoyed the institute despite the snow!

BE Corporation, the parent company of the Adam's Mark Hotel, filed a $100,000 lawsuit against the Organization of American Historians (OAH) on August 8. The suit arose from OAH’s decision last spring to move its annual meeting from the Adam’s Mark in St. Louis to the campus of Saint Louis University due to race discrimination allegations against the hotel. The nationwide hotel chain was charged in 1999 by the U.S. Department of Justice and the NAACP with discriminatory practices against African American guests and employees. Despite overwhelming evidence dating to the 1980s, HBE/Adam’s Mark vehemently fought the lawsuits. The chain settled with all parties in March of this year for $8 million, the largest racial discrimination settlement by a hotel in U.S. history.

The contract with the hotel stipulated that OAH would be liable for the cost of meeting rooms if it failed to fill 65% of its guest room block. According to HBE/Adam’s Mark, the total amount of that loss came to $100,730.78.

Last winter the Council of the Society of American Archivists met to consider appropriate responses to the allegations, given that the Adam’s Mark in Denver was the site for its 64th annual meeting in August. While reflecting consternation, anger and dismay, both individuals and groups within SAA agreed that it should maintain its current plan to hold the conference at the Adam’s Mark, recognizing that to do otherwise could endanger SAA’s financial future. In addressing the issue, Council passed a resolution reaffirming its 1992 policy on equal opportunity and nondiscrimination (Archival Outlook, March/April 2000, p. 5) and added to the conference program a special plenary session on diversity, presented by Maurice Banks of the U.S. Department of Transportation.

Although SAA took a different tack than OAH, SAA Council supported OAH in its decision to move its annual meeting to another site. At its late summer meeting in Denver, SAA Council affirmed its support of OAH by passing the following resolution.

SAA Resolution in support of the Organization of American Historians Regarding HBE/Adam’s Mark

Whereas, on August 8, 2000, HBE/Adam’s Mark sued the Organization of American Historians (OAH) for breach of contract pursuant to OAH’s refusal to hold its spring 2000 meeting at the St. Louis Adam’s Mark Hotel;
And whereas, the OAH action resulted from a lawsuit brought against HBE/Adam’s Mark in 1999 by the U.S. Department of Justice and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for discriminatory practices against African Americans;
Therefore, be it resolved that the Society of American Archivists expresses its continued support of the OAH’s continuing efforts to resolve issues related to its differences with HBE/Adam’s Mark. SAA further acknowledges OAH’s moral courage which contributed materially to compelling HBE/Adam’s Mark to settle the Justice Department/NAACP lawsuit with the largest racial discrimination settlement by a hotel in U.S. history.

OAH has established a special fund to help defray expenses associated with moving its annual meeting to Saint Louis University. For more information, please refer to the OAH Web site at www.oah.org/meetings/2000/fund.html.
PATTI O’HARA and SOLVEIG DESUTTER joined the staff of the Society of American Archivists on November 1st and will share the position of education director. "They are seasoned educators, marketers, and curriculum developers and their arrival is a huge step forward and upward for SAA," remarked SAA Executive Director Susan Fox, who served on the search committee with SAA members Timothy Ericson and Susan Davis, and Carroll Dendler, SAA’s director of human resources.

Solveig DeSutter is currently vice president of education for MindLeap, Inc., a start-up venture of Education Management Corporation, the largest provider of proprietary design education, charged with developing product, market, and infrastructure to deliver continuing education to design professionals. Solveig also has a history of successfully leading and managing education in a variety of association settings, most recently as director of course administration at the Appraisal Institute in Chicago, the nation’s largest professional association for commercial and residential real estate appraisers. With a budget of $5 million, she directed a staff of 15 in providing 500 chapter, national and government course offerings. Products included an extensive educational appraisal curriculum and publications with emphasis on enhancing product offerings and growing revenues.

Patricia O’Hara is currently a management/staff development consultant for MarianJoy RehabLink in west suburban Chicago, where she has designed and managed a grant-funded enrichment program focusing on the culturally diverse needs of approximately 1,500 campus residents, staff and volunteers, as well as developed a Learning Resource Clearinghouse to provide managers in the network with self-directed learning opportunities. As a training professional, Patti has designed, coordinated, and delivered seminars and workshops in change management, customer service, teamwork, presentation techniques, and managerial competency assessment. She collaborated on the design and delivery of an eight-hour invitational workshop, “Teaching Adult Learners,” for the Medical Library Association, and wrote “Guide for Planning and Sponsoring Extension Courses” for the Society of Real Estate Appraisers. She is qualified to provide and interpret the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator and the Managerial Assessment of Proficiency.

In their new job-share position with SAA, Solveig and Patti will split time and responsibilities in the office. Solveig will be in on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday and will be the education “point person” whose focus will be on leadership, including securing development funds, guiding the program toward cutting-edge educational offerings, marketing and scheduling programs, acting as a liaison to other providers and initiating and maintaining the contacts. Patti will work half days Monday through Friday and her focus will be to ensure the quality standards for program design, promotion and delivery, as well as training the trainers.

Patti and Solveig succeed Reneta Webb, SAA’s interim education director for the past 18 months, who is now director of public relations for the Sisters of St. Joseph, TOSF. SAA looks forward to the path Solveig and Patti will blaze together to bring our continuing education program into the twenty-first century. They may be reached via email at pohara@archivists.org (Patti) and sdesutter@archivists.org (Solveig).
The future of archival education will be shaped by a planned revision of SAA's graduate education guidelines. This is an important opportunity for all SAA members and others interested in the archival profession to express their views about the content of these guidelines. Several key questions are listed in the box below.

The Committee on Professional Education and Development (CEPD) is conducting an intensive review of the Guidelines for the Development of a Curriculum for a Master of Archival Studies Degree, which SAA Council approved in June 1994, as the first step in developing revised guidelines for archival education. New education guidelines will be presented to SAA members for additional comment by summer 2001 and then to Council for consideration.

Graduate education guidelines are an important means of defining what qualifications are needed to become a professional archivist. They constitute one of many ways in which we define ourselves as a profession. The review of these guidelines will affect all members of the profession in coming years, both those preparing for careers in the field and those who will be hiring—or working with—graduates of archival education programs. It is thus important for our professional education standards to be reviewed thoroughly so that they will reflect as nearly as possible a consensus among members of the profession as to the standards for professional education. SAA first adopted archival education guidelines in 1977, with a revised statement in 1988, before approving the current MAS degree guidelines in 1994.

Open Forum in Denver

In August the SAA annual meeting in Denver, CEPD conducted an open forum to obtain suggestions and comments. Three prominent leaders in the archival profession—John Fleckner, Timothy Ericson, and Elizabeth Yakel—presented commentary on the nature of the archival profession and future educational needs. Following the three presentations, members of the open forum audience engaged in a lively discussion of the current MAS guidelines and concerns to be addressed in drafting new education guidelines. Several key issues emerged for consideration. One of the fundamental questions raised was whether the MAS degree should remain as the focus of SAA's education guidelines or should be replaced by a more inclusive statement of a graduate education curriculum independent of a specific degree.

- As the CEPD guidelines revision process continues, there will be periodic updates and opportunities for comments.

SAA Archivist Frank Cook Retires

September 30, 2000, marked the end of an era as J. FRANK COOK retired after working for 35 years in the archives at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. After receiving his B.S. degree from East Tennessee State University in 1961, Frank enrolled at the University of Wisconsin-Madison where he earned M.S. (1963) and Ph. D. degrees (1970) in American history. It was during his graduate studies that he began to work for Jess Boell in the university archives. In 1965 he was named assistant university archivist and in 1970 he became university archivist, a position he held for his entire career.

Frank has been very active in professional activities over the years. A founding member of MAC, he served that organization as vice president, on council, and as a member of numerous committees and boards. He was likewise very active in SAA. A regular program participant and a member of numerous committees and task forces, Frank served a term on SAA Council from 1974-78, was elected vice president in 1981, and served as SAA president during 1982-83. He was named a Fellow of SAA in 1978.

But perhaps Frank’s most generous and longstanding contribution to the profession has been his volunteer service as SAA’s archivist since 1978. During that time he helped to build an extensive collection of SAA records. He continually promoted the records for research and used the collection extensively himself as background for his 1983 presidential address, “The Blessings of Providence on an Association of Archivists,” which, when published in the American Archivist (fall 1983), quickly became a standard reference for anyone interested in the history of SAA.

KENNETH GROSSI of Oberlin College received the Society of Ohio Archivists Merit Award last spring. The award citation noted that, “during his distinguished service as an officer of SOA, he helped to build a solid financial base for the organization, contributed to educational efforts for professional and amateur archivists, and promoted the archival profession in Ohio. Ken Grossi’s work with SOA has given the organization the means with which to face the challenges of the new millennium.”

FREDERICK L. HONHART, director of University Archives and Historical Collections at Michigan State University was elected in July to the steering committee of the International Council on Archives/Section of University and Research Institution Archives. This is a four-year term. This body, which is responsible for the activities of the University and Research Institution Archives Section, met in Cordoba and Seville, Spain, in late September.

In recent years he also gave generously of his time during the creation of the Academy of Certified Archivists, serving as that organization’s archivist as well.

Outside of work Frank has been active in church activities and in a number of Madison-area charitable organizations. For many years, he has been a part of a volunteer group that coordinates meals for a homeless shelter operated by his church. In particular he enjoys being part of a team that serves breakfast to homeless men at the shelter. He is presently serving on the Madison Transitional Housing Board, which secures interim housing and shelter for homeless people.

Those who were lucky enough to have worked with Frank know he was equally generous in giving his time to individuals and his willingness to help in any project by doing whatever was needed to accomplish the goal.

A frustrated tour guide in real life, Frank plans to do extensive traveling now that he has the time, beginning with a trip to New England with a stopover at the MAC-MARAC fall meeting in Cleveland. The tightly choreographed schedule will not surprise those of us who have had the unique experience of traveling with Frank to one or more of the numerous professional meetings that he attended faithfully over the years. We know that all the traveling he now has the time to do will be excruciatingly well planned. We wish him a safe trip.

—Timothy L. Ericson, University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee

ERIC KETELAAR, The Netherlands Visiting Professor at the University of Michigan, School of Information, was appointed Honorary President of the International Congress on Archives, in recognition of his role in ICA over twenty years, but in particular in the last years when he has been acting president. The citation stresses, “Eric Ketelaar has been the steady and inspirational hand guiding the ICA in recent times. A friend to all and a leader through an interesting but sometimes difficult period of adjustment and reorganization as ICA moves to make itself truly representative and international.”

ANN MARIE PRZYBYLA was appointed regional advisory officer for Region 4 of the New York State Archives. Ann Marie will be providing support for records management and archives projects conducted by local governments in 11 counties of the Adirondack Region. She previously held a position as archivist of The Cleveland Museum of Art.
JOHN MCDONALD (National Archives of Canada), outgoing chairman of the Committee on Electronic and Other Current Records of the International Council on Archives, was appointed Honorary Member of ICA, in recognition of his visionary leadership of ICA’s electronic records program and his commitment to the co-operation between ICA and ARMA International. ICA has currently 45 honorary members, among whom are SAA members FRANK EVANS, MEYER FISHBEIN, JAMES RHoads.

GERALD ROBERTS, director of Archives and Special Collections at Berea College in Kentucky, is retiring this February. He has enjoyed a distinguished career at Berea since joining its staff in 1975. Prior to that, Roberts taught at the University of Missouri-Rolla. He served as chairman of the Kentucky Council on Archives from 1979-80 and as co-editor of the Kentucky Archivist from 1979-82. He has a Ph.D. in history from Michigan State University and studied archival and manuscript administration under Philip Mason at Wayne State. Best Wishes, Gerald!

New SAA Order Fulfillment Assistant

JAMEL BROWN has joined the staff of the Society of American Archivists as a part-time order fulfillment assistant. He will be working with Rodney Franklin to insure the careful packaging and timely fulfillment of publications orders. Jamel is a junior at the University of Illinois at Chicago, where he is majoring in economics and philosophy. He enjoys writing poetry and collecting vintage comic books in his free time. Jamel may be reached via e-mail at publications@archivists.org.

Obituaries

The Autry Museum of Western Heritage is deeply saddened by the loss of SHARON C. JOHNSON, who lost her battle with cancer on August 22, 2000. After graduating from San Jose State University in 1992, Sharon began her eight-year career as the archivist for the Autry. Sharon was responsible for the institutional archives and manuscript collections. She had a deep knowledge of the material and a love of Western history that made her indispensable to the museum. Handling a diverse collection, Sharon assisted staff and researchers, and answered requests from around the world. Despite her busy schedule, she generously gave talks to local and national organizations.

The family requests that in lieu of flowers, a donation be made to the American Cancer Society in memory of Sharon C. Johnson. American Cancer Society, 3255 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 701, Los Angeles, CA 90010; 888/778-5900. Please indicate next of kin as Chris Johnson.

The Society of American Archivists wishes to express its profound regret at the death on June 3, 2000 of DAVID VAN TASSEL. David Van Tassel was an American historian who initially specialized in American intellectual history. He came to Case Western Reserve University on a full-time basis as a specialist in this area in 1969. However, within half a decade he created programs that transcended his subject specialty and which affected and continued to affect the archival community in the United States.

As a member and twice chair of the Department of History at Case Western Reserve, he worked with the late Ruth W. Helmuth to institute a program in archival and museum studies at CWRU in 1971. A number of members of the profession gained their training and experience through this very highly regarded program.

In 1974, out of a concern for the quality of history instruction in the secondary schools and a more general concern about the public’s interaction with history, he created History Day. That program, which began locally in Cleveland, is now international in scope. History Day competitions throughout the United States have served and continue to serve to introduce hundreds of thousands of school children, as well as their teachers, to the primary resources upon which their projects (papers, displays, and performances) must be based. No other program in the United States has done as much as History Day to introduce people to archives and manuscripts repositories.

While David Van Tassel created these programs largely to promote the study of history and the applied use of history, he was also always cognizant of their effect on and importance to the archival and museum community. That cognizance derived in large part from his own study of the evolution of historical studies in the United States. His book, Recording America’s Past, was the first major scholarly review of the evolution of historical agencies in the United States and of the contributions of individuals such as Lyman Draper, Jeremy Belknap, and Peter Force within that field. His subsequent research focused on the evolution of the American Historical Association, research that made him quite familiar with J. Franklin Jameson and others who advocated the creation and expansion of archives within the United States.

David Van Tassel’s death this past June was a major loss for his university, his community and his family, friends, and colleagues. It was also a major loss for the archival profession, for in David Van Tassel the profession had a strong friend and advocate who could speak with equal authority to academe and the public. We are fortunate, however, that the programs he created, particularly National History Day, will endure and thereby continue to foster an awareness of the importance of archives to a large number of Americans.

David Van Tassel is survived by his wife of 50 years Helen Liddell Van Tassel; children and spouses: Emily Field Van Tassel and Charles Geyh of Bloomington, Indiana; Katharine Van Tassel and Richard Williams of Cleveland Heights, Ohio; Jonathan J. Van Tassel of State College, Pennsylvania; and Jeanie and Michael Swed of Missouri; his brother, Jonathan Van Tassel of Shreveport, Louisiana. Dr. Van Tassel’s son D. Dirck died in 1988.

—Resolution passed by SAA Council, August 2000
A Tale of Two Conferences

August and September were big months for the SAA publications office. First up was the two-day International Archives and Technology Exposition held during the SAA annual meeting in Denver. Attendees browsed through display copies of nearly 170 different titles distributed by SAA—from basic texts on archival fundamentals to more advanced readings on archival theory, Encoded Archival Description, electronic records, and program management. Approximately 164 SAA members ordered books onsite or took advantage of the traditional half-price display copy sale on the closing afternoon of the exhibit.

Two weeks later, SAA shipped 18 boxes of books and give-aways (such as catalogs, membership applications, journals, and newsletters) to the 14th International Congress on Archives in Seville, Spain, which was attended by nearly 3,000 people. We set up shop in the exposition hall where we were invited to share booth space with the International Council on Archives. This was the first time SAA sold books at an international archival congress. I am delighted to report that the response was overwhelmingly positive and the demand for North American resources is great. In five days SAA moved 300 books representing 21 different titles. The best seller during the course of the congress was SAA's newest publication, American Archival Studies: Readings in Theory and Practice, hot off the press. Most customers were first-time buyers of SAA books. Some had visited the SAA Web site and they gushed openly about the bountiful selection of books in the online catalog. In Seville they were pleased to walk away with their own personal copies to take back to repositories throughout Europe, Africa, Asia, Australia, and South America.

These recent experiences reinforce the invaluable service that SAA publications provide to the archival community, not only in North America, but the world over. The sheer number and variety of publications available from SAA indeed make it the premier clearinghouse for archival resources in print—a virtual one-stop shop for the profession. SAA's mission is twofold: to publish books with superior content written by archival experts in theory and practice; and to acquire for distribution an assortment of resources that serve the diverse needs of archivists, records managers and allied professionals. SAA is committed to strengthening its foothold in the global marketplace by making its resources more widely available to the international community.

Realizing that the path runs in two directions, we will continue to bring relevant international literature to the North American market. Already SAA distributes approximately 20 international titles on archival topics. In addition, SAA has licensed translations of six of its own titles. Finally, SAA is exploring the possibility of translating into English important foreign archival texts. We'll keep you posted as we forge ahead.
Norton on Archives: The Writings of Margaret Cross Norton on Archival and Records Management

edited by Thornton W. Mitchell with a foreword by Ernst Posner

Out of print for almost two decades, this collection of essays by a pioneer in the archival profession still represents a precious source of material and study for archivists and students alike. As early as 1930, Margaret Cross Norton, who was Illinois State Archivist from 1922-1957, paved the way toward recognition of archival administration as an indispensable element of public service entitled to full public support. Her essays have a timelessness and currency that gives them a continuing value and this book stands as an important monument to her work.

JANUS Special Issue on Chinese Archives (1999.2)

guest edited by Nancy Bartlett and Wang Lan

Articles from 23 authors provide first-hand accounts of the leaps and turns of Chinese archival development, with modern Chinese archival law as the keystone. With an eye to the future, these Chinese authors portray a national commitment to advanced research and teaching, the infusion of sound archival administration into new technology and construction, an appreciation for the unique characteristics of photo archives and the papers of Chairman Mao, a sensitivity to minority archives, the intensive processes of records inspection and retention, and exceptional productivity in the spheres of distance learning and archival publications. Two American scholars offer their own perspectives gained from years of research and writing derived from both historic and modern Chinese archives.

Closing an Era: Historical Perspectives on Modern Archives and Records Management
Richard J. Cox

Archivists and records managers have tended to discount the importance of their historical antecedents, ignoring the fact that many of the current debates and issues before the profession are not new but embedded in the historical evolution of the records professions. Re-examining some of the historical origins helps records professionals to re-examine their mission to manage records for the benefit of organizations and of all of society. Such re-evaluation also helps to remind records professionals and others that the concerns generated by new electronic recordkeeping technologies are not new at all, but built deep within the fabric of traditional records creation and administration.

Introduction to Archival Organization and Description: Access to Cultural Heritage
Michael J. Fox and Peter L. Wilkerson; edited by Suzanne R. Warren

Archival collections offer unique challenges to their custodians. Each collection is intimately tied to the people, time, actions, and events that generated the collection, and therefore needs to be examined, organized, and described individually. Yet archivists recognize the imperative to standardize their procedures for consistency, especially with the increasing use of networked electronic environments. This book serves as an introduction to the common organizational and descriptive practices that have developed in response to the particular requirements of archival collections. It serves as an orientation to fundamental archival principles for beginning and novice archivists, and includes such topics as the characteristics of archival materials and how these shape practices, the gathering and analyses of information that goes into descriptions, types of finding aids, and the deployment of information systems. Also included are a glossary and a list of Web resources.

American Archival Studies: Readings in Theory and Practice
edited by Randall C. Jimerson

The 28 essays reprinted in this volume represent important recent American writings on archives and the role of archivists in modern society. They are collected here in order to make them more easily accessible to archival students and practicing archivists, indeed to anyone who wants to explore archival issues in greater detail than can be found in introductory texts.

Executive Director Transition Completed at NCC

Not too long ago, former NCC Director Page Putnam Miller and I completed a multiweek executive director “transition” by finishing the chore of culling the NCC files, packing the last of Page’s books, and, in my case, learning the intricacies of NCC’s computer systems. This week, here in the NCC’s cozy office located on the top floor of the Capitol Hill Victorian house that serves as headquarters for the American Historical Association in Washington, D.C., I am writing this—the first installment of “Washington Beat”—for Archival Outlook.

In the coming weeks and months, as the NCC Board of Directors begins to review the NCC’s past activities and prepares to meet the challenges of the future, you probably will notice some modest changes in the way the NCC conducts its activities and delivers its services. For example, NCC’s Web page (www.h-net.msu.edu/~ncc) will be updated and hopefully will evolve into a cyber center for our advocacy efforts. Plans are also in the works for the creation of an “advocacy network” where recipients of our “Legislative Alerts” (which are sent to those of you who subscribe to the NCC online newsletter, NCC Washington Update), may be asked to take rapid action by calling, e-mailing, or writing senators or representatives to advance the cause of history and archives. In general, a closer rapport with the archival community is in the making.

But rest assured that NCC’s mission is not changing. It continues to focus on advocacy—the support of historical and archival programs, teaching, research, and public programming; the promotion of greater access to historical records and government information; and support for federal humanities programs. We will also continue to address issues relating to copyright and historic preservation. As always, I invite your comments, responses, and suggestions; contact me at rbcraig3@juno.com.

FY 2001 Appropriations: Archives a Winner

In contrast to previous years, this year Congress opted not to make a mad dash to the appropriation finish line, but rather moved at a relaxed, though frustrating, pace. At first, it was believed that Congress would take the various appropriation bills, gather them in a huge omnibus bill, and drop it on President Clinton’s desk in the closing days of the Congressional session. That did not happen.

On September 20, Senate Republicans hoped to pass a $32.8 billion spending bill that linked funding for the Legislative Branch appropriations (including the Library of Congress), the Treasury Department (including the National Archives and Records Administration) and U.S. Postal Service. To use the words of one Capitol Hill insider, the strategy “crashed and burned”—not so much because of disagreements with the White House, but rather, as a result of a failure to resolve contentious issues within the Republicans’ own ranks. In an embarrassing 69-28 defeat for the Republican leadership the Senate refused to move the bill when many legislators turned squeamish about voting for the bill because of the inclusion of a controversial Congressional salary pay increase, a measure to provide a pay raise to the IRS, and another item that repealed the federal excise tax on telephones. In the end, 26 Republicans bolted and joined 43 Democrats who collectively voted down the measure. The Republican leadership blamed the Democrats for the defeat to which Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle (D-SD) responded, “poppycock...the Republican appropriation strategy just blew up.”

Eventually, Congress returned to a more traditional approach in their efforts to deal with the various appropriations bills. President Clinton signed a number of “continuing resolutions”—temporary stop-gap spending measures that enabled the government to operate beyond the end of the fiscal year (September 30), thus giving lawmakers the time they needed to finish their legislative business. Irrespective of the procedural mess that Congress engaged in when passing legislation to meet the government’s fiscal needs, in the end, in general, the archival community came out a winner in the FY 2001 budget battle.

National Archives. At this writing, the real winner appears to be the National Archives and Records Administration. Funding for the agency is provided in the Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government appropriation bill (H.R. 4871; S. 2900 which was wrapped into H.R. 4985). President Clinton had proposed a FY 2001 total budget request of $309.355 million for the National Archives, an $86.733 million increase over the FY 2000 level of $222.622 million. He requested $6 million, the current level, for competitive grants for the NHPRC. The major new spending initiative in the president’s budget was $88 million for the renovation of Archives I on the Mall. The proposed work would include correcting mechanical, electrical, plumbing, and fire safety deficiencies, upgrading storage conditions to meet modern archival standards, providing increased exhibit and public meeting spaces, and constructing new encasements for the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the Bill of Rights. The House did not allocate any funds for the renovation, but the Senate did and fortunately, in conference, the Senate numbers were sustained.

The agreement reached by House and Senate conferees provides NARA with sufficient funding to cover all the National Archives fixed costs; in addition there is funding to transfer President Clinton’s papers to the Clinton Library in Little Rock, Arkansas, money to accelerate the processing of veterans records, and some start-up monies for the electronic records project. Funds were also set aside for the proposed Archives I $88 million renovation, which was part of the President’s budget proposal. In FY 2001 NARA will receive $209,392 million for National Archives “operations” and base level funding of $4.950 million for “repairs and restoration.” The NHPRC budget includes funding for the president’s full request of $6 million.

legislation that provides funding for the Library of Congress, the Government Printing Office, the Superintendent of Documents, and the Federal Depository Library Program netted the LC a total budget of $448.5 million. This represents a $21 million increase from the LC's FY 2000 budget and is well above the original House and Senate recommendations. Of singular importance to the archival community is the funding provided for the Digital Futures Project which was approved for $7.890 million - the House recommended level plus an additional $300,000 for "technology" that was recommended in the Senate version.

All in all, it was a tough battle this year over governmental appropriations. But in the end, given that this was an election year, and that there was a strong desire (especially by the Republican leadership that controlled Congress) for fiscal austerity, the archival profession did relatively well.

NHPRC Reauthorization Clears Senate Committee

The Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs passed H.R. 4110, a bill to reauthorize the National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC) for the fiscal years 2002 through 2005 with a federal appropriations ceiling of $10 million. While the bill passed the House of Representatives on July 24, because the NHPRC still has a year to run in its current authorization cycle, the Senate was reluctant to push for enactment this year. Following a concerted lobbying effort by the historical and archival community, the Senate changed its mind and passed the measure in early October. It no longer seems to be a question of whether the measure will pass once it is taken up by the Senate, but rather when President Clinton will sign the measure into law.

NARA Strategic Plan

On July 17, 2000, representatives of the historical and archival communities, as well as other organizational stakeholders, met with Archivist John Carlin and other NARA officials to provide comments on NARA's most recent update of the strategic plan entitled "Ready Access to Essential Evidence: The Strategic Plan of the National Archives and Records Administration, 1997-2007." Comments and discussion points of reviewers focused on many aspects of the plan including electronic records, human resources development, the unique needs of the presidential libraries and genealogists, partnering and organization collaboration; the need for NARA to "cultivate allies" and the need for the plan to better link goals, with money and provide time frames for accomplishment were also raised. Updating the plan is mandated by law every three years. That plan has now been reviewed and finalized by NARA officials. The 57-page updated plan may be downloaded from the NARA Web site: http://www.nara.gov/nara/vision/nara2000.html.
Proliferation of Archival Journals

Move over American Archivist, Archival Issues, Archivaria, Provenance, Archives and Manuscripts, Archivum and Janus, there are two new kids on the block.

Next spring Kluwer Academic Publishers will debut Archival Science, International Journal on Recorded Information. Billed as "the only independent, international, peer-reviewed journal on archival science, covering all aspects of theory, methodology and practice, with appropriate attention to the non-anglophone world," this quarterly periodical will be available in English. Edited by Peter Horsman and Theo Thomassen of the Archive School in Amsterdam, The Netherlands, and Eric Ketelaar, currently The Netherlands Visiting Professor at the University of Michigan School of Information, the journal aims at promoting the development of archival science as an autonomous scientific discipline, targeting primarily researchers and educators in archival science as well as those who are professionally interested in recorded information. Subscriptions (four issues per year) either paper or online are available for $182 (or $218 for combined paper and online versions). Individuals may subscribe to the paper version at the reduced rate of $65 per year. To request a sample copy, visit www.wwap.nl/journals/archival_science.

In addition, in spring 2002 the Haworth Information Press will unveil Journal of Archival Organization, which invites readers to "stay at the forefront of the vital issues associated with this increasingly important aspect of librarianship!" Co-edited by Ruth C. Carter of Wexford, Pennsylvania, and Thomas J. Frusciano, university archivist at Rutgers University Libraries, this new quarterly international journal will encompass all aspects of the arrangement, description, and provision of access to all forms of archival materials. Subscriptions (four issues per year) are $45 for individuals/$75 for institutions/$75 for libraries. To reserve a sample copy, contact getinfo@haworthpressinc.com.

UNESCO Launches Archives Portal

The UNESCO Archives Portal is "an international gateway to information for archivists and archive users." Visitors to the site can browse through a variety of categories containing links to archives, associations, conferences and meetings, education and training, Internet resources, primary sources, and more. The site also allows visitors to add a new link or modify a previously existing link. An electronic newsletter provides information on new entries. The "In Focus" section presents Web sites or archives which are particularly interesting. Visitors can also rank Web sites of archives and related institutions through an online rating system.

Visit the UNESCO Archives Portal at: www.unesco.org/webworld/portal_archive.

Business Archives

The latest issue of Archives and Manuscripts [vol. 27, no. 2], the journal of the Australian Society of Archivists, focuses on business archives and features an assortment of international articles on the subject, including one by Karen Benedict on "Business Archives Reporting Structures: Is There an Ideal Placement?" To order a copy of this issue, contact Archives and Manuscripts, P.O. Box 83, O'Connor ACT 2602, Australia; asa@assp.unimelb.edu.au.

Archives in the News

Intrepid SAA members Evelyn Frangakis and Bruce Dearstyne respectively submitted the following articles highlighting archives in the news.

* The New York Times featured an article entitled "History for Sale, Dents and All" by Margaret Loke [September 18, 2000]. The article noted that "Made for America (Part 1)," the summer show at the Howard Greenberg Gallery in SoHo, included the work of photography giants like Margaret Bourke-White, Edward Steichen, Robert Capa, Edward Weston and Robert Frank. All the images were vintage prints from the Time Inc. picture collection, many taken for publication in Fortune or Life, and all were for sale at prices ranging from $1,500 to $65,000. Like the recent offerings at auctions and in galleries of vintage prints from the picture archives of The New York Times and The Daily News, the show raised a provocative issue: does it matter that newspapers and magazines are selling the original prints from their archives?" For a copy of the article, visit nytimes.com.

* The Washington Post featured an article in its National News section, "Historical Records Provide a Growing Sense of Global Warmth," [September 8, 2000], which described how "an international team of scientists sifting through historical records has found unusual evidence for long-term global warming: many lakes and rivers in the Northern Hemisphere typically freeze over a week later and thaw out 10 days sooner than they did 150 years ago. Interestingly, that trend appears to have begun at least half a century before the profound buildup of greenhouse gases caused by the burning of fossil fuels by humans. The team analyzed written accounts, some centuries old, including newspaper reports, fur traders' logs, and notes of religious events. From that welter of sources, they extracted the dates of ice formation and breakup in dozens of locations on three continents."

Mellon Grants Awarded

- The Philadelphia Museum of Art recently was awarded $750,000 from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation. The grant will support the museum’s efforts to catalogue and enhance access to five valuable and resource-rich archival collections: the Louise and Walter Arensberg Archives; the Marcel Duchamp Research Collection; the John G. Johnson Collection Archives; the Lloyd Goodrich and Edith Havens Goodrich, Whitney Museum of American Art, Record of Works by Thomas Eakins; and the Fiske Kimball Collection. The grant, which is the largest ever received by the archives of the museum, will fund arrangement, description, and cataloguing of the collections according to current archival standards, utilizing Encoded Archival Description (or EAD, a new electronic formatting standard). The resulting finding aids will then be made available on the Internet through the Research Libraries Information Network (RLIN), making possible broad scholarly engagement with these resources.

- The Arthur and Elizabeth Schlesinger Library on the History of Women in America received a grant of $295,000 from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation to complete the cataloging and digitization of 20,000 photographs as part of the library’s Photo Access Project. The new photos, along with 16,000 previously digitized images, are part of a significant collection of historic images that documents the lives of American women. They will be available on the Internet initially as part of Harvard’s Visual Information Access database (http://via.harvard.edu:748/html/VIA.html).

Richard P. Scharchburg Archives Dedicated

Kettering University of Flint, Michigan, dedicated the Richard P. Scharchburg Archives on Sept. 19, 2000. The archives are named for the late Professor Scharchburg, who passed away last June. Scharchburg was a renowned automotive historian, the Thompson professor of industrial history at Kettering University, and director of the Kettering/GMI Alumni Foundation Collection of Industrial History that was established in 1974 and which will now be housed in the new archives.

Visual Imaging Reference Tool

The Digital Library Federation and Research Libraries Group have issued “Guidelines to Quality Visual Resource Imaging,” a Web-based reference tool designed to serve the growing community of museums, archives, and research libraries that are turning to digital conversion of original photographs, prints, drawings, and maps. More information, including the guidelines, are available at www.rlg.org/visguides/.
New Progress at NARA May Also Help You

In Fiscal Year 2000 we had an exceptional array of accomplishments at the National Archives and Records Administration. But does any of it matter to archivists beyond NARA? The answer is emphatically yes.

Clearly our colleagues in other archival institutions have a stake in the work we are doing to build an Electronic Records Archives. Last year, after a prototype demonstrated the feasibility of an Electronic Records Archives, we joined with technological and financial partners to start building it. This ERA promises to be able to preserve any kind of electronic record, free from dependence on any specific hardware or software, and enables customers to find records they want, in formats suited to their needs.

An ERA is crucial for NARA’s future ability to achieve the major access and preservation goals in its strategic plan. But the entire federal government—indeed, today’s “information society” at large—has a stake in our success. An ERA will make greater quantities of information available, quickly and for as long as needed, to every home, office, school, library—and archives—in America with an Internet connection. The ERA will give increased reality to e-government. And the technology promises to be useful to many kinds of archives, libraries, agencies, and businesses, regardless of size. In fact, our National Publications and Records Commission has made a grant to foster such “scalability.”

As this is written, the Congress was close to acting on legislation that would give us additional funds to continue pioneering for an ERA. If we receive those funds, many of you along with us are likely to be ultimate beneficiaries.

Also on the electronic records front, we took steps that may be meaningful to those of you who have records management as well as archival functions. After endorsing a standard for electronic records management that we helped the Department of Defense (DoD) develop, we also endorsed a DoD process for evaluating the ability of software products to meet that standard. Such products may have applicability outside the federal government as well as within it. And if our pending budget request is approved, we’ll have funds with which to test inside NARA a records management application for electronic records, the results of which we will share with everyone interested.

Also, many of you may be interested in storage standards we promulgated in this past year for records centers. For us, this is a major achievement that will help protect federal records whether in agencies’ storage facilities, commercial records centers, or our own. Additionally, archivists with records management concerns will be interested in the outcome of the major study we have launched of how records are managed in the federal government, which is the first step towards possible improvements. Last year we created a work plan and awarded a contract for the study, and we will let all of you know the results.

Our Fast Track project developed products of use in dealing with electronic records now. These products are available to you as well through our web site: www.nara.gov, where in fact you can find more information on most of what I have mentioned. Depending on your situation, you may also have an interest in our project for “Access to Archival Databases,” in which we created a prototype for providing online access to the electronic databases we already have of records of Korean and Vietnam War casualties, among other electronic records. Also of possible outside interest, we expanded our electronic-records verification system, designed to help researchers select and access specific email messages, cables, and other structured textual records.

Additionally, we progressed in building our Archival Research Catalog. Eventually it will provide online access to descriptions of all the records in our holdings nationwide. This is a major access effort through which we’ll enable researchers with Internet access anywhere in the world to see what we have without leaving their homes, offices, schools, or local libraries and archives. Already the NARA Archival Information Locator (NAIL), the prototype for our Archival Research Catalogue, offers more than 400,000 records descriptions online.

Although these are the things archivists generally may find useful, we made advances towards all the major goals in our strategic plan—improving records management, meeting electronic records challenges, increasing access to records, and preserving records in appropriate environments. And concerning the last, we did something truly special of interest to every American.

We began the re-encasement of our nation’s Charters of Freedom—the Declaration of Independence, the U.S. Constitution, and the Bill of Rights—which many of you and millions of other people have come to see in the Rotunda of our original building in Washington, DC. We designed and built two prototype encasements for the Charters of Freedom. Conservators in our Document Conservation Lab successfully removed two of the seven Charters pages from the deteriorating encasements that had housed them for nearly 50 years, cleaned and repaired the two documents, and placed them in the new encasements. We unveiled the first encasement to the public as part of a series of successful events celebrating Constitution Week. And a new exhibit in the Rotunda and a Charters Web page now offer the public further information about the Charters and our work to make them safe for continued display.

With anticipated funds from our FY 2001 budget, we’ll be able to complete renovation of the 60-year-old National Archives building itself. And with the help of private contributors as well as Congress and the administration, we plan enhancements to make the Charters experience even more stimulating and meaningful than before.

In all this, we are grateful for SAA support, and for mutual exchanges of information about things of value to us all.
Viva Seville! ICA Meeting an International Success

From September 21-26, 2000, some 3,000 archivists from 130 countries descended on the city of Seville, Spain, to attend the 14th quadrennial congress of the International Council on Archives.

Under the theme of "Archives of the New Millennium in the Information Society," the congress opened with addresses by Spanish government dignitaries, most notably King Juan Carlos, and representatives of the international archival community. The Palacio de Exposiciones y Congresos, built for the Universal Expo of 1992, was the site of all congress activities, which included ICA executive committee deliberations, plenary sessions and section discussions. Major papers delivered at plenary sessions covered topics such as, "The Management and Use of Electronic Records in a Global Context," "The Development of Archival Science as a Scholarly Discipline," and "The Role of Archivists in the Society of Leisure," with parallel sessions on quality management in archives, comparative archival terminology, and international standardization vs. regional and national traditions. All major sessions were simultaneously interpreted in six languages: English, French, Spanish, German, Russian and Chinese.

The exhibit hall housed impressive archives and documentation displays from 35 regional, national and international institutions. The Society of American Archivists maintained a publications booth, selling out the entire stock during the course of the congress and taking orders for many more SAA publications.

Other activities included an organ recital in Seville’s main cathedral and an under-the-stars closing banquet at the Plaza de Espana, followed by dancing into the wee hours of the morning.

A delegation of approximately 25 American archivists attended the congress.

One had to be impressed by the setting chosen for the 14th International Congress on Archives. During the heyday of Spanish exploration and conquest, Seville was the primary port of entry for the riches brought to Spain from the New World. Its Gothic cathedral and the Archivo de Indias, its narrow winding streets, cobbled plazas and gated inner-city villas, its monuments and wide boulevards all recall Spain’s time of world prominence. But Seville, too, is a modern European city with plenty of traffic headaches, well-stocked and bustling shops, native shoppers rushing to make their purchases before afternoon siesta, and crowded cafes where both tourists and locals order a wide variety of tapas washed down with cold Spanish beer or sangria.

Beyond the historical and cultural impression the city of Seville imparted, the enduring impression was perhaps the sense of professional solidarity that such an international gathering engenders. To rub elbows, to drink and talk with colleagues from Western and Eastern Europe, Africa, North and South America, and Asia was an unforgettable experience.

Honorary ICA President ERIC KETEALAR set the tone in his opening address when he said: "Across centuries and across the world, we all share mankind’s common features as well as its exceptions. Thereby archives, and access to archives worldwide, are powerful tools to achieve solidarity and communion. They also serve to understand the contrasts between cultures, nations and peoples, across the world and through time. But archives cannot fulfill this role by themselves. Without human care and human intervention archives are devoid of life... They wait till someone takes them from the past into the present, infusing them with the promise of the future. That person is the archivist, who not only ensures preservation, but makes archives available for use—any use, by anybody, at anytime and in any place."

The common professional mission that archivists share across cultures and borders will only increase in importance in the coming years. American archivists should begin making plans now to attend the 15th International Congress on Archives to be held in Vienna, Austria, in 2004, not only to ensure a strong U.S. presence and participation, but to enhance our international professional understanding and experience our shared professional community.

ICA Section of Churches and Religious Denominations

The ICA Section of Churches and Religious Denominations (ICA/SKR) held its first international conference, September 19-20, 2000, in Seville, Spain. Entitled “Challenges in the Professional Management of Church Archives,” the meeting was attended by 45 archivists from 10 countries. His Excellency Don Carlos Amigo Vallejo, Archbishop of Seville, opened the conference. Two separate sessions discussed use trends and access issues as they relate to church archives. The section’s annual business meeting followed the conference and its steering committee met on September 23 to discuss plans for the next SKR meeting to be held in St. Petersburg in June 2001. [Other ICA section meeting summaries will appear in future editions of the World View column.]

UK Hosts Conference on Photo Collections

The Public Record Office in Richmond, UK, hosted a conference, “Written in Light,” September 12-14, 2000, as part of the project Safeguarding European Photographic Images for Access (SEPIA). SEPIA is funded by the European Union under the Framework Programme in Support of Culture. SARAH ROUSE of the Library of Congress presented a paper entitled “Balancing Access with Preservation: Practical Solutions for Photographic Collections at the Library of Congress Prints and Photographs Division.” CONNIE SCHULZ of the University of South Carolina also attended the conference along with 150 other photo collection professionals, including archivists, librarians, curators, conservators and experts in photography and digital imaging. For more information on SEPIA visit www.know.nl/ecpa/sepia/.

could not help but be touched by her descriptions of the massive problems and the great need for education and training.

Just as Tom Hickerson discussed in his last column (Archival Outlook, July/August 2000, p. 3), the need to be open to partnerships and joint projects is an important goal for the future of SAA. It’s ironic that it happened in Spain, but this was an opportunity for several positive meetings with the leadership of ARMA International, which was also represented at Seville. ARMA is a partner in the work of the International Records Management Trust, and this provided the platform to explore chances for greater collaboration with a professional group with which we share many common interests.

Finally, I think I can appreciate some of the feelings of those first-time attendees at Denver. There’s the sense of simply not knowing the culture of the new organization. How do the meetings work? Who does what? What do all those acronyms stand for? I was happy to see perhaps 50 Americans and Canadians that I knew, but 50 out of three thousand still left a lot of unfamiliar faces. Fortunately, I found good conversation and an eagerness to share knowledge and impressions with archivists from all over the world.

I emerged from the 1976 meeting in Washington with a good feeling and a strong desire to return. I’m happy to say, I had the same feeling coming back from Seville. We, SAA, have a role to play in the world and I’m happy to contribute to opening that idea up for our further examination and action.

Errata

- American Archivist. Please note the following correction to the spring/summer 2000 issue (vol. 63, no. 1). In the article, “Looking at Archives in Art,” the last sentence on page 124 should read:

> “There is no room for playful or profound ambiguity in archival representations.”

An errata sheet will be sent to all SAA members and journal subscribers. It will be mailed along with the next issue of the American Archivist (vol. 63, no. 2), which is slated for publication this winter.

- American Archival Studies: Readings in Theory and Practice. Please note the following correction to chapter 17, “Encoded Archival Description: The Development of an Encoding Standard for Archival Finding Aids.” At the top of page 406 the first full sentence should read:

> “It is also possible to use SGML to treat the descriptive components of finding aids as named entities. EAD, for example, distinguishes scope and content, biographies and agency histories, chronological lists, various types of administrative information, and many more components of archival description. By explicitly identifying these components, software can be employed to index, search, display, and navigate each component in particular ways.

> SGML also supports referential markup....”

An errata sheet is available from SAA. This text will be amended in the second printing of the publication.

- The 2000-2001 SAA Directory of Individual and Institutional Members was distributed in August. Thanks to all for their feedback on the new directory.
