SAA in Chicago

While the 1986 Program Committee and the SAA staff polish up the finishing touches for the Society's 50th anniversary meeting, scheduled for August 26-30, in Chicago, host committee co-chairs, Archie Motley and Valerie Browne, have planned a full slate of Chicago area activities. Meeting participants will be able to choose from a variety of tours including an all-day religious archives tour which will visit four Chicago area institutions; a business archives tour which will feature an ideal archival corporate setting; Newberry Library facilities tours; an automation tour of Northwestern University's library system; and other conservation and photographic collection tours. Other activities will include walking tours which will highlight the city's architecture, an evening at Second City, and more.

For those staying over Saturday night, the afternoon activities will include a Chicago Motor HighLights Tours and, of course, an evening at the ballpark.

A special highlight of this year's annual meeting will be the 50th Anniversary Banquet celebrating the founding of the Society of American Archivists.

American Airlines will serve as the official carrier for SAA's Chicago meeting. By calling 1-800-433-1790 (in Texas, 1-800-792-1160), and mentioning STAR S-11601, members can obtain complete details. Participants can secure a 40% discount off full-day coach fare by purchasing tickets 30 days prior to departure and a 35% discount with an advance purchase of 7 days. Passengers originating in Canada should call the local American Airlines Reservations Office and ask to be transferred to the Meeting Services Desk to secure a 25% discount with an advance purchase of 14 days.

The headquarters hotel for the annual meeting is the Chicago Marriott Hotel Downtown. Rates are $67 for a single and $76 for a double. Reservation cards will be sent to all members in the annual meeting program mailing.

Child care services will be available to meeting registrants. Those wishing to use this service should contact SAA at (312) 922-0140 for registration information. The deadline for child care registration is July 14.

Archivist of the United States Update

By the end of the week of March 23rd, the name of John Agresto, the acting Chair of the National Endowment for the Humanities, had been informally submitted to the Republican leadership in the Senate for their reaction. No formal nomination, however, has been made at this time. As indicated in the March SAA Newsletter, the name of Don Wilson, Director of the Gerald R. Ford Library, is still being mentioned. Both Wilson and Agresto have strong supporters among those close to the White House and some feel that the struggle for the nomination is not over.

COUNCIL SELECTS A NEW DIRECTOR

SAA President Shonnie Finnegan announced in April that Donn C. Neal has been selected by the Society's Council to become Executive Director when Ann Morgan Campbell leaves office. Neal, who holds a Ph.D. in history from the University of Michigan, has served as Executive Director of the Pittsburgh Council on Higher Education since 1981.

In Pittsburgh, Neal administers a consortium in which the ten institutions of higher education in Allegheny County create and implement cooperative projects. Previously, Neal taught history courses at Elmira College and the University of Michigan and was the Vice President of the Great Lakes Colleges Association from 1976 through 1981. He was selected after a search that extended over a period of nearly a year. The Executive Director-designate will be introduced to the membership at the Chicago annual meeting.

Details of Neal's appointment and the transition will appear in the July NEWSLETTER.

Bentley Library Fellowships

The Bentley Historical Library of the University of Michigan has announced the award of six fellowships to support research on problems relating to the administration of modern documentation. The fellowship program, now in its fourth year, is funded jointly by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation and the National Endowment for the Humanities. The recipients are Christopher Baer, Appraisal Archivist, Hagley Museum and Library; David Bearman, Deputy Director, Office of Information Resources Management, Smithsonian Institution; James C. Bradsher, Supervisory Archivist, Planning and Policy Evaluation Branch, National Archives; Judith Endelman, NHPRC Fellow, Bentley Historical Library; Avra Michelson, Data Base Editor, Bentley Historical Library; and J. Peter Sigmond, Director, Riiks Archiefschool, Netherlands. The national fellowship advisory committee designated 1986 as the single year fellowship applications would be considered from individuals affiliated with the Bentley Library. All applicants competed for fellowships on an equal basis.

The range of proposed studies includes an evaluation of the FBI records appraisal project, the role of automation in producing archival finding aids, an analysis of the architecture of archival information systems and the organization of archival networks, the issues raised concerning subject access and the RLIN AMC data base, an evaluation of the role of collection analysis in creating collection development policies, and issues raised in appraising records of large corporations.

Fellows were selected upon the recommendation of an advisory committee composed of Dr. Margaret Child, Assistant Director, Smithsonian Institution Library; Dr. Joan Hoff-Wilson, Executive Secretary, Organization of American Historians; Dr. Philip P. Mason, Director, Walter P. Reuther Library, Wayne State University; and Dr. Robert M. Warner, Dean, School of Library Science, University of Michigan. Project directors for the Research Fellowship Program for Study of Modern Archives are Dr. Francis X. Blouin and William K. Wallach, director and assistant director, respectively, of the Bentley Historical Library.

Further information about the 1986 or 1987 program can be obtained from the project director, Francis X. Blouin, at the Bentley Historical Library, University of Michigan, 1150 Beal Ave., Ann Arbor, MI 48109-2113.

The Program Committee has selected a record-high 108 sessions to be presented at the meeting including 26 workshops, 6 poster sessions, and 5 work-in-progress sessions. Members who have not received annual meeting programs by mid-June should contact SAA headquarters.

NHPRC Grants Awarded

The National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC) met in February and recommended $948,000 for eleven projects for documentary editions and $136,000 for sixteen projects for historical records programs. Also recommended were subvention grants totalling $24,000, to help defray publication costs for three documentary editions. The grant recommendations were made in response to more than $2,500,000 in requests.

Because of threatened reductions in its grant budget, the Commission was sparing in its recommendations for funding at the meeting. The levels of support for the eleven documentary projects were reduced by an average of nine per cent. And the funding decisions on eighteen potentially fundable records projects were deferred until the Commission's June meeting. The Commission chose to endorse nine of those projects at the February meeting, to help them to raise private funding.

Other Commission actions at the February meeting included: (a) endorsement of a study of State Archives' conservation needs prepared by the National Association of Government Archives and Records Administrators, (b) approval of revisions in the Commission's Native American records initiative, and (c) endorsement of components of a national historical records program, including the recommendations of the Society of American Archivists' Task Force on Goals and Priorities and plans for a clearinghouse for records information. The Commission also endorsed a series of documentary publications to be published by the National Archives and Records Administration. The documentary publications will reproduce a broad selection of documents, primarily from the holdings of the National Archives, that relate to a key theme in American history.

Following is a partial list of grants and endorsements recommended at the February 1986 meeting:

GRANTS:

Regional and National Projects

♦ American Association for State and Local History, Nashville, Tennessee: a grant of $20,000 to continue the work of NICLOG, the National Information Center for Local Government Records. Under a two-year NHPRC grant starting in 1984, NICLOG created educational materials on the care and use of local government records.

♦ Minnesota Historical Society, St. Paul, Minnesota: up to $35,000 to convene a national meeting of the state coordinators for the NHPRC records program. ♦ Minnesota Historical Society, St. Paul, Minnesota: a supplemental grant of $4,970 to continue the work of a current project to report on technical standards used by state and local governments in creating archival-quality microfilm.

Statewide Projects

♦ Michigan State University, East Lansing, Michigan: a supplemental grant of $5,000 to continue a project to develop microcomputer software; the software will permit manipulation of data confirming to the USMARC AMC format (United States Machine-Readable Cataloging, Archival and Manuscripts Control format). With the software, institutions will be able to use the AMC format fully on their local computer systems, even if they cannot participate in a nationwide, on-line bibliographic network such as the Research Libraries Information Network (RLIN).

The following grants were awarded to NHPRC State Historical Records Advisory Boards to support travel and meeting expenses, in order to plan statewide historical records programs and improve the review process for NHPRC records proposals.

Survey of Fees Charged by State Archives, 1985

In April, 1985, the Washington State Archives sent questionnaires to the other forty-nine state archives to determine their policies on charging patrons for copying and research done by staff. Forty-seven states responded.

The results were that all states charged copying fees, ranging from ten cents per page in Vermont (with the first ten pages free), to fifty cents in Kentucky for mail-in requests. Some states charge a minimum copying fee for mail-in requests, while others charge a flat handling fee.

It was found that no states charge patrons for access to records when visiting the archives in person, but many either charge for staff time spent on actually researching a request or they limit the amount of staff time which might be spent. In most cases where a charge is made, it is for mail-in requests. In a few cases fees are charged for specific kinds of requests, such as vital records searches for genealogists. The reasons given for charging research fees included reimbursement for staff time and the need to deter "fishing trips." None of the archives responding reported any problems or complaints in regard to their fees. In most cases the receipts go into a non-recoverable general fund.

Following is a list of copying and research fees charged by state archives in 1985.

Commentary

To the Editor:

There are good and fundamental reasons to oppose certification, and I oppose it. I owe my colleagues, many of whom disagree with this position, the reasons which impel me to oppose.

Archivy and other liberal arts thrive in open inspiration from a variety of disciplines, enriched now by this and now by that in free and exciting debate. To debase so inspirational a college of interests to a code of conduct would be a travesty. To do so with free will and enthusiasm is to betray the profession.

Setting minimum standards may seem attractive as a means to improve the worst in us. Unfortunately, it accepts a minimum level of accomplishment as sufficient. Sufficiency, in turn, breeds complaisance, not inspiration. The ticket to respectability today may become the chains of technocratic licensing that trammel us tomorrow.

Certification may, with the ebb and flow of self interest on the part of certifiers, be a weapon to exclude, and good and creative thought may be excluded for light and transient reasons. In a well-regulated society, only those who regulate are free to enjoy. The rest must seek satisfaction in the security of obedience.

No. If we are to have the elect and the damned of archivy, let me stand outside with the damned. I will continue to profess, but as a free thinker and no slave to a code.

By all means let us have standards. Let them not be standards of exclusion or obedience. Let them be examples of inspiration, challenges to creativity, and models for emulation.

Council to Meet

The next meeting of SAA's Council will be June 13-15, in Washington, D.C. A copy of the agenda can be obtained from the Executive Director after May 30.
To the Editor:

What follows is a personal expression of opinion about the certification of archivists. However, it is not a statement without some foundation in the actual experience of certifying professionals in a related field. I am a founding member of the Institute of Certified Records Managers (ICRM), have been on its Board of Regents since its founding in 1975, served as its first President, and remain as its Treasurer. Lest some feel that this may be prejudicial to the certification topic within the archival field (profession?), I add that I have held the title of Corporate Archivist and established a still functioning major corporate archives, have served on the SAA as a member or chairman of committees, edited the glossary of terminology, and am an SAA Fellow. For the historical record I was also chosen to run against a distinguished former Archivist of the United States for the presidency of the SAA. If you don't remember who the other candidate was, ask an SAA member with grey hair.

That is preamble, establishing where I am coming from with the following declarative sentence: The SAA should establish minimum standards of education and knowledge for archivists. It follows that the most convenient administrative way to do this is through a certification process.

Certification is not a measure of competence. The only real measure of competence is performance and accomplishment on the job. Certification can and does establish that the holder of the certification has met certain pre-established levels of education, experience, and knowledge. For example, the ICRM requires three years of professional level experience, a baccalaureate, and the passing of a six-part thirteen hour examination. The Regents may permit substitution of experience for education on a two for one basis. Are these requirements written in stone? Hardly, they have changed over the years since 1975; but, the essential elements have not changed: education, experience, examination. Should the SAA adopt the same mix of requirements? That is not the issue. The issue is whether the SAA, and those who call themselves "archivists," are willing to establish a minimum standard that must be met if a person is to say, "I am an archivist." (Could JFK had said it better?)

Why should the SAA do this? Because it is the organization that purports to represent "archivists." The ICRM is an independent body with one task, the certification of records managers. No annual conference, no seminars, no courses, just the process of certification. However, it was founded and sponsored by the professional organizations that assume responsibility for the field. ARMA (Association of Records Managers and Administrators) really put the ICRM in business but made it independent so as to insulate it from the politics of any large professional organization and to establish the purity (? - there must be a better word) of its certification process. The SAA has been a sponsor since the beginning (how many of you know that?). For archivists, the SAA is the national organization, therefore the SAA should do this. I think that's a pretty straightforward piece of logic.

The ICRM did have a "grandfather" clause, for a year and then it was abolished. If you didn't get "grandfathered" in that time, too bad. It was planned that way. Should the SAA have a "grandfather" clause? It proved helpful to the ICRM; I expect it would to an SAA certifying body. But it is a detail to be negotiated, not central to the concept of certification. (By the way, the ICRM clause had the same three elements: education, experience, knowledge.)

The ICRM has eleven years experience in the certification business. There are a number of SAA members (including some Fellows) who have shared in that experience as members of the Board or examination development. We faced the same problems, and the same arguments. It is doable, it is worthwhile doing. I sense that there is an underlying feeling that the SAA should do this. If so, then let's do it. There are those who oppose it. Their position really boils down to letting the marketplace decide who is and who isn't an archivist. It is a logical position. I disagree with it.

The SAA has a responsibility for establishing standards for archivists. Let us get on with it.

Native American Archives: AN INTRODUCTION

JOHN A. FLECKNER

This booklet is one product of the Native American Archives Project, a cooperative effort by seven organizations and institutions with major funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The Project's other activities included a series of conferences on Native American Archives and two slide-tape programs. The purpose of all project activities is to promote the establishment and development of archives programs by Native American groups.

In the preface to Native American Archives author John A. Fleckner states the booklet's purposes: "It discusses how archives can contribute to long-range goals of Indian cultural self-determination as well as to more immediate administrative, educational, and cultural needs. It is also an introduction to some basic ideas about what an archives is and how it operates. Finally, it offers suggestions for assistance in areas such as technical training and resource development. Like the project of which it is a part, this booklet focuses on education about archives, not on in-depth training in becoming an archivist. Information about such training may be found in the text and appendices."

"It describes the requirements for establishing a new archives so clearly that it could well become the bible for any would-be archivist at the Genesis of such a project."

"It is the best introduction to archives I have ever seen."

"The style of this manual is an unexpected delight, couching as it does, mundane matters in elegant language."

A Note on Archival Careers

Archives are the noncurrent records of individuals, groups, institutions and governments that contain information of enduring value. Traditionally defined as unpublished manuscripts preserved for their scholarly interest, modern archives embrace a much greater variety of formats such as photographs, films, sound recordings, computer tapes, video and optical digital disks. They are the products of everyday activity and are valued and used largely in that context. In most cases, they will not be used in an archival setting until much later, and then, usually for purposes other than those for which they were created, including, but not limited to, academic research.

Many people know that historians, professional and amateur alike, rely on archival sources to reconstruct past events and to decipher the lessons to be learned from them. And that genealogists search a variety of archival records to reconstruct their family histories. Less well-known are the many instances in which the information contained in archival records is directly applied to the resolution of contemporary problems and conflicts. For example, archives have helped native Americans to establish legal claims to land and privileges once guaranteed by federal and state governments; medical researchers to study patterns of diseases and, in turn, to prolong our life expectancy; authors and playwrights to acquire a feel for the people and times about which they are writing; and businesses to improve their public relations and to promote new products. In short, archives benefit nearly everyone, even those who have never directly used them.

The Work of the Archivist

The primary task of the professional archivist is to establish and maintain control, both physical and intellectual, over records of enduring value in accordance with accepted standards and practices. This process begins with the identification and selection of such records based on their informational and factual value which, in turn, requires an understanding of the historical context in which the records were created, the uses for which they were intended, and their relationships to other sources. The archivist then arranges and describes the records, produces inventories, registers and other finding aids, and assists researchers to facilitate their use. Archivists also plan and direct exhibition, publication, education and other outreach programs to broaden the use of collections and to enlist support for archival programs.

All archivists and especially those with administrative responsibility need to understand and apply the principles of sound management to their work. Like any other manager, the archivist must know how to set goals and establish priorities; use resources wisely and efficiently; motivate and supervise a staff; develop resources and build support for an archival program, both within the parent organization and among society at large. Regardless of the nature or size of the program, these skills are as essential to the overall success of the archival mission as acquiring, arranging, describing and preserving the documents themselves.

The work of the archivist is closely related to, but still distinct from, that of other information professionals. The librarian and the archivist, for example, both collect and preserve materials in order to make them available for use. Despite recent technological changes that have blurred the distinction, there remain significant differences between the library and archival materials and, hence, in the ways they are arranged, described and used. Archival work is also closely related to that of information managers who are concerned with controlling the vast quantities of documentation that are created while conducting daily business, most of which will eventually be destroyed. Archivists, by contrast, are concerned with relatively small quantities of records deemed important enough to be retained permanently and that are generally used for different purposes, usually long after their initial purpose has been served. The archival value of records, nonetheless, is judged partly on the basis of their origin and purpose. Rapid changes in computer technology continue, of course, to create both problems and opportunities for all information-related professionals, archivists included.

Archival Repositories

Archival repositories are as diverse as the institutions and people they serve. They range from large, well-funded operations providing a full range of archival services to limited activities dependent upon a part-time volunteer staff. There is a substantial variation not only in the nature and scope of their holdings, but also in their structure and organizational placement within the parent institution. Archives are located in federal, state and local government; schools, colleges and universities; religious institutions; businesses; hospitals; museums; labor unions; and historical societies — wherever it is important to retain indefinitely the record of an organization and of the people around it.

Qualifications for Employment

At present, there are a variety of educational programs available to prepare individuals for a career in archives. Most entry-level positions require an undergraduate and a graduate degree, together with archival coursework and a practicum. Although undergraduate majors vary widely, many archivists come to their work with a master’s degree in either history or library science or both. Other useful specializations include public administration and political science. For higher-ranking positions in academic institutions, a Ph.D. may be required. Particular knowledge of certain subject areas may be important for work in archives that have specialized topical emphases. Training and experience in conducting research in primary and secondary sources are also helpful.

The number and content of archival education offerings, especially multi-course programs, has continued to expand in recent years. The latter include a variety of courses or seminars in more specialized areas such as conservation management, automation, records management and special collections in addition to the basic theory and functions of archives. Many programs also include internships and practica that offer students extended hands-on experience in dealing with archival programs. There are also a growing number of opportunities to conduct research in archival subjects such as user studies and documentation strategies.

Salaries and Benefits

Salaries, benefits, and working conditions vary greatly, depending on the size and nature of the employing institution. A recent census of the archival profession in the United States and Canada indicates that the average archives was established in the 1970s, has a staff of four or less employees, an annual budget under $100,000 and assists over 300 researchers every year. Most archivists have civil service standing, and archivists in academic institutions often have faculty status. Some archivists move from one repository to another, especially at the beginning of their careers, but most eventually achieve long-term job stability. Almost universally, archivists express a high degree of professional and personal satisfaction with their work.

Placement

Most archival job openings are advertised in the SAA Newsletter and the newsletters of the regional and local archival organizations. In addition, the SAA publishes a bimonthly Employment Bulletin, which is available to members for an additional cost of $12 per year, and maintains a confidential “Candidate Register” listing the qualifications of archivists seeking employment.

Guidelines for Graduate Archival Education Programs

At present, SAA does not accredit archival education and training programs, institutes, or courses, so inclusion in this Directory does not imply endorsement or approval by the Society. A decade ago, the SAA Committee on Education and Professional Development (CEPD) prepared guidelines for graduate education programs which have served the profession well. However, there have been many expressions of interest in revising and expanding them to reflect the continuing growth of the profession and the increasing complexity of its mission in the Information Age. With this in mind, the CEPD is currently drafting new guidelines which are scheduled to be submitted to the SAA Council for adoption in late 1986 or early 1987. To obtain copies of the 1977 guidelines or other information, contact SAA, 600 S. Federal Street, Suite 504, Chicago, IL 60605 (312) 922-0140.

Directory of Education Programs

This Directory attempts to provide the latest, most complete information about the many and diverse archival training programs currently available. The information provided here is subject to change, and the reader is referred to the SAA Newsletter for current supplementary information about training programs and continuing education offerings. The SAA Newsletter is mailed to individual and institutional members of the Society. For information on membership in the Society, the SAA Placement Service, publications, and the SAA Newsletter, contact: Society of American Archivists, 600 S. Federal Street, Suite 504, Chicago, IL 60605. (312) 922-0140.

The listings which follow were compiled from questionnaires distributed by the Committee on Education and Professional Development of the Society of American Archivists in the winter of 1986. Course offerings in this Directory are identified according to the following general categories:

Graduate Study

Multi-course Programs

These programs generally offer students an introduction to the theory and practice of archives as well as additional practical work in an archive or manuscript collection. In addition, courses may be offered pertaining to oral history, preservation and conservation of manuscripts, reprography, audio and visual records, and records in machine-readable form. These programs are usually set within the context of a master’s degree program in history or library science; some offer a joint M.A.-M.L.S. degree in history and library science. Two schools now offer a full master’s degree program in archival studies. Some programs also offer archives as a field of study for the Ph.D. in either history or library science.

Single Course Offerings

These courses provide a student in a history M.A. program or a library science M.L.S. program with an introduction to the theory and practices of archives. They generally provide an overview and are not sufficient in themselves as preparation for a career in the administration of archives.
Post-appointment Training

Certain very large archival institutions, most notably the National Archives of both the United States and Canada, offer a program designed to train newly hired personnel in the application of archival theory and practice to all phases of large and very complex government practices.

Workshops and Institutes

Basic Workshops or Institutes

These are intended to acquaint newcomers to archival positions with the principles of archival theory and practice. They provide an introduction to archives for the part-time archivist or employees of institutions that cannot afford a professional archivist. They usually last from two days to two weeks and thus do not provide the depth of coverage found in the formal graduate offerings.

Continuing Education for Practicing Archivists

These opportunities are intended to deal with complex applications of accepted archival principles, with new developments in the field, or with special problems related to allied professions.

The Directory is arranged alphabetically by state with Canadian entries following those for the United States. Each entry contains the following information: institution name; category of offering (multi-course, single course, or institute); degree program(s) of which archives courses are a part (M.A., M.L.S., Ph.D., or other); courses offered including title, instructor’s name and term offered (F = fall, W = winter, Sp = spring, Su = summer, Irreg = irregular). If a practicum is given, it is so noted following the degree sequence. Name and address of contact person concludes the entry. In instances where one or more of these items are missing from an entry, the missing information was not supplied on the questionnaire.

Modern Archives Reader
Basic Readings on Archival Theory and Practice

Published by the National Archives, this 350-page book brings together for the first time the classic essays of archival administration and more recent articles that demonstrate the practical applications of archival principles.

Included in the volume are 24 essays that first appeared in the pages of The American Archivist, The Midwestern Archivist, Provenance, and other archival publications. Grouped into chapters, the essays cover the range of archival topics from the European origins of the profession through appraisal, arrangement, and description, to establishing priorities. Each chapter begins with an original introduction that sets the essays in context.

Prepared especially for the Reader are essays on subject guides, archival terminology, a glossary of archival terms, and suggestions for further reading. A Modern Archives Reader is both a valuable reference tool for the working archivist and a textbook for students of archival administration. NHPRC Fellowship Program

At its February meeting, the National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC) designated two universities and a state archives to receive and train fellows in archival administration during the 1986/87 academic year. The fellowships are jointly funded by the Commission and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation.

The fellowships provide advanced administrative training for mid-career archivists. They carry a $15,000 stipend and up to $3,000 for fringe benefits, for a nine- to ten-month period beginning in August or September 1986.

The host institutions and their fellowship training programs are as follows:

- Arizona State University, Hayden Library, Tempe, Arizona. Four administrative units are located at the Library: The Arizona Collection, the Arizona Historical Foundation, Special Collections, and the University Archives. The holdings include papers of prominent Arizona politicians, as well as photographs and manuscripts on Arizona's social and economic history since the territorial period. Among other activities, the archival fellow will plan for the automation of finding aids, for the preservation and processing of a large photographic accession, and for a combined new facility and reference system for the four units.

- California State Archives, Sacramento, California. The State Archives cares for 55,000 cubic feet of California State government records dating from 1850 to the present. Its programs also include exhibits, microfilming, records management, and document preservation. The archival fellow will assist in this work by undertaking records appraisal and scheduling, planning a new archival facility, planning for transfer of archival materials into temporary new storage space, and establishing procedures for the Archive's participation in the Research Libraries Information Network (RLIN). The fellow will also devote considerable time to developing a documentation strategy for California legislative records, which currently are under-represented in the State Archives's holdings.

- University of Southern Mississippi, McCain Library and Archives, Hattiesburg, Mississippi. The Library's holdings include 250 major collections oriented toward the history of Mississippi and the South, as well as the Grummond Collection of Children's Literature, the University Archives, and the Hattiesburg Municipal Archives. The Library will offer the archival fellow the chance to work with a small professional staff on a variety of activities. Among them are lectures, exhibits, and other outreach functions, records management for the City of Hattiesburg, and establishment of appraisal and descriptive guidelines for case files recently donated by a prominent Mississippi civil rights lawyer.

The Ohio Historical Society was designated by the Commission to serve as the alternate host institution.

Applicants for the fellowships should have at least three years' archival work experience and have completed the equivalent of two semester's full-time graduate work in a program containing an archival education component.

Fellowship application forms should be requested from the NHPRC, National Archives Building, Washington, D.C. 20408, and must be completed and returned to the Commission by May 15, 1986. The Commission then will provide the completed applications to the host institutions, which will select the fellows by June 1986. During this period, applicants are asked not to communicate directly with the host institutions unless the host institution initiates the correspondence.

MARC for Archives and Manuscripts. A Compendium of Practice, by Max J. Evans and Lisa B. Weber, is the product of a conference held in Madison, WI, in 1984 to discuss and compare individual practice and documents the procedures of institutions using the MARC format for Archival and Manuscripts Control. The format provides a technical structure for exchanging data and a framework for organizing data about archival materials.

Institutions and organizations represented in the manual are: Online Computer Library Center (OCLC); The Research Libraries Group (RLG); the first repositories using RLG's Research Libraries Information Network for Archival and Manuscript Control; Cornell, Yale, Stanford universities and the Hoover Institution; Chicago Historical Society; Historical Department of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (LDS); New York State Archives; Smithsonian Institution; and the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

The manual, organized in field number order, summarizes the MARC AMC format for each field and follows with a narrative description of the users' local practices, emphasizing variations and offering examples of fully-tagged records. (1985) $15 members, $20 others.

MARC for Archives and Manuscripts: The AMC Format, by Nancy Sahli, is a multi-part users manual for archivists, manuscripts curators, librarians, researchers, and others seeking information about the structure and use of the USMARC Archival and Manuscripts Control format. The core of the volume, the format itself, contains all of the relevant definitions, examples, and other information pertaining to the AMC format. An introduction provides information about the format history, structure, and implementation, and is accompanied by examples of a data entry form and AMC format records, as well as a bibliography and glossary. In addition, the manual includes the SAA's Data Element Dictionary. (1985) $20 members, $30 others.

Archives and Manuscripts: Law, by Gary M. Peterson and Trudy Huskamp Peterson, focuses on basic legal issues in archives. In presenting the legal questions that confront archivists, the authors describe major types of laws governing archives and discuss reasonable means of analyzing and resolving legal issues. The first five chapters focus on the legal aspect of common archival functions: the accession, donation, and receipt of materials; the concepts and administration of access policy; and the legal implications of reference service. The last three chapters deal with special topics including a discussion of copyright law, a review of the legal standards for admissibility of documents in evidence, a discussion of the problems of replevin, advice on working with a lawyer, and a description of the process of litigation. A glossary of selected legal terms and a bibliographical essay is also included. (1985) $9 members, $13 others.

Audiovisuals for Archivists, compiled and annotated by Timothy L. Ericson, is an updated listing of more than 100 audiovisual programs for, about, and/or by archives and archivists. Each citation includes information on type of program, length, equipment required, purchase price, cost and terms of loan, ordering address, and a brief description of the program. (1985) $2 members and others. Quantity discount if ordered in multiples of 25: $7 for 25 copies, $14 for 50, etc.
