

You Want Me to Do What Now?!

Tackling the Digital Backlog through Reorganization, Collaboration, and Redefining Traditional Roles

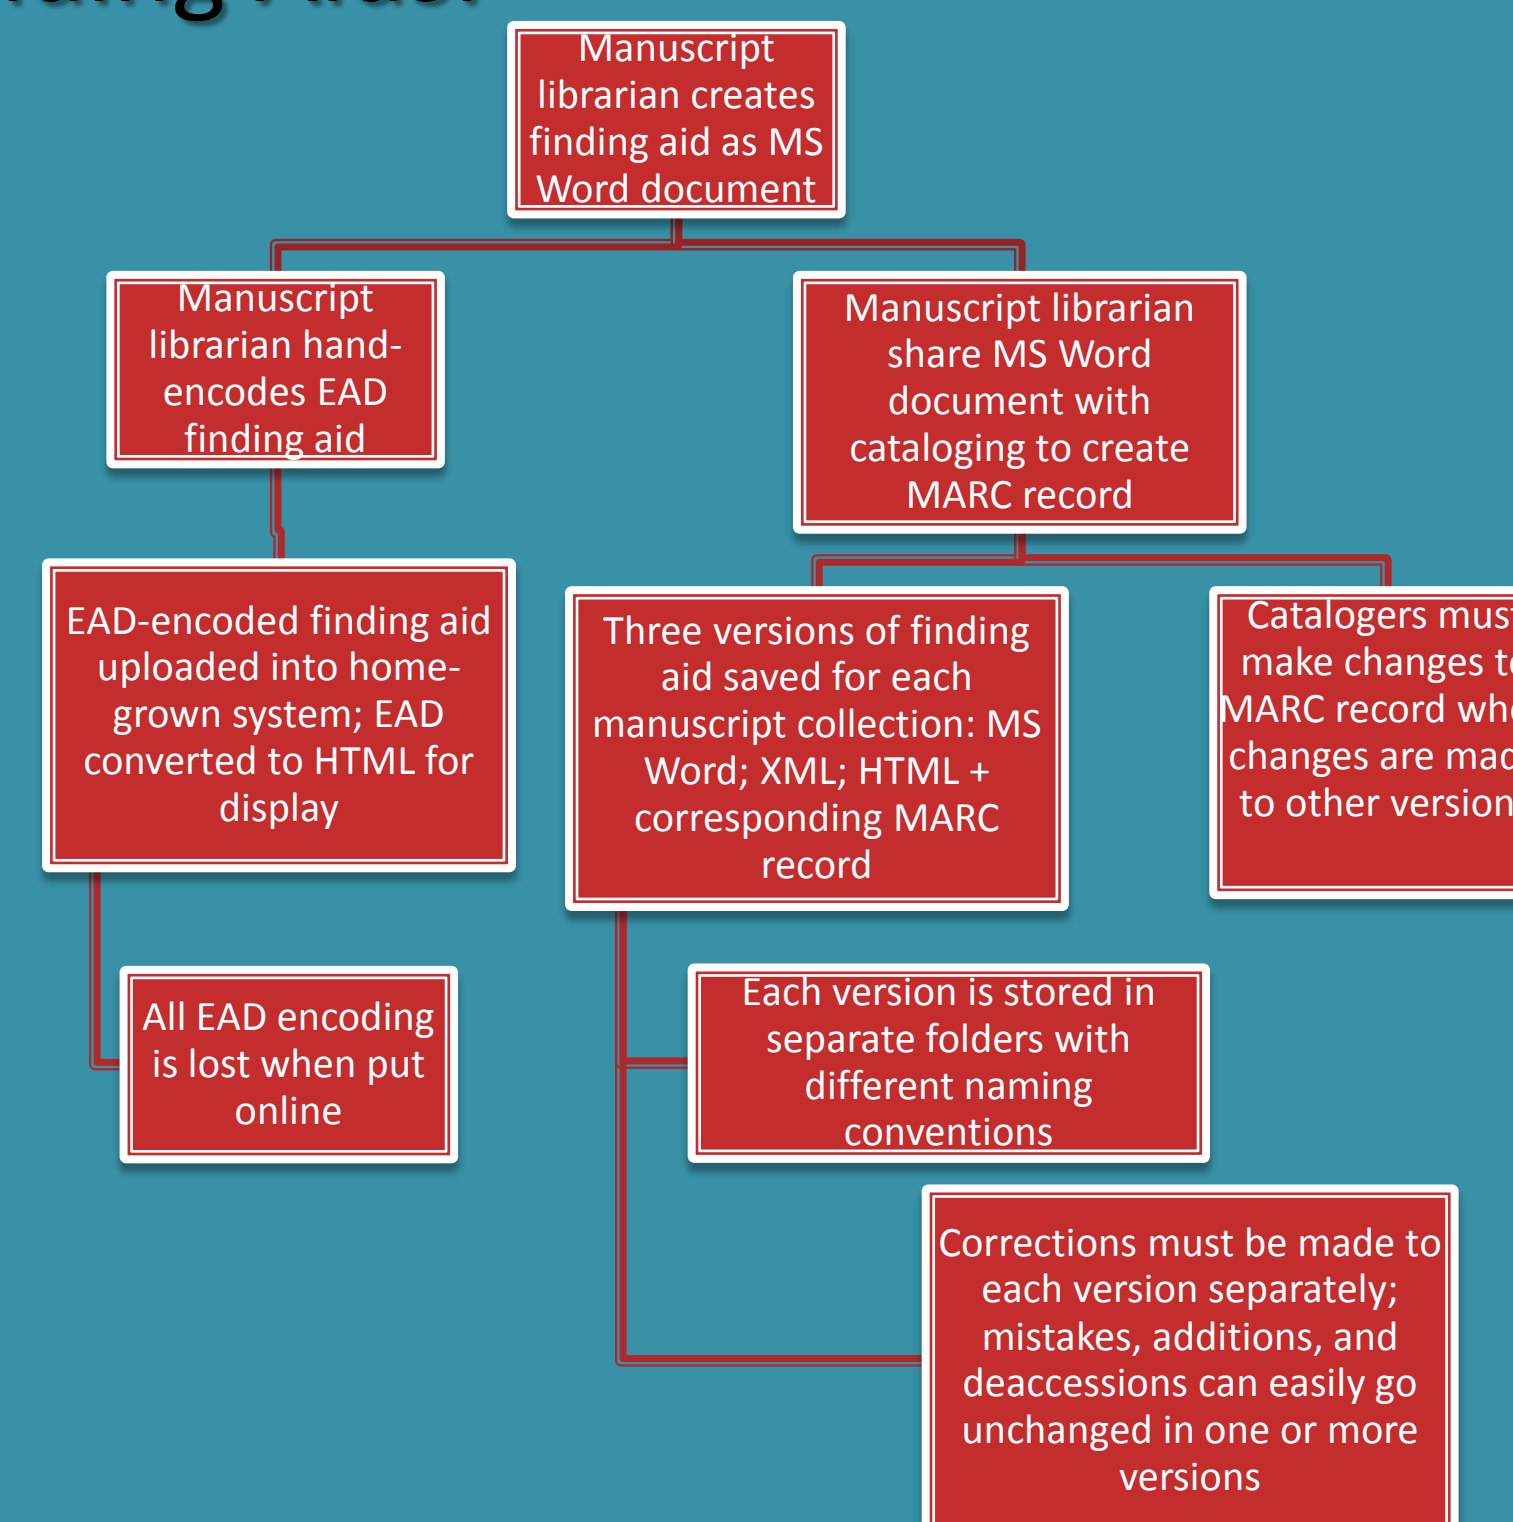

SUMMARY

Archivists and librarians at J. Murrey Atkins Library Special Collections at UNC Charlotte were challenged to find innovative, efficient solutions to effectively manage the digital backlog (including digital finding aids, digital images, and oral histories) and hidden collections created in the past decade.

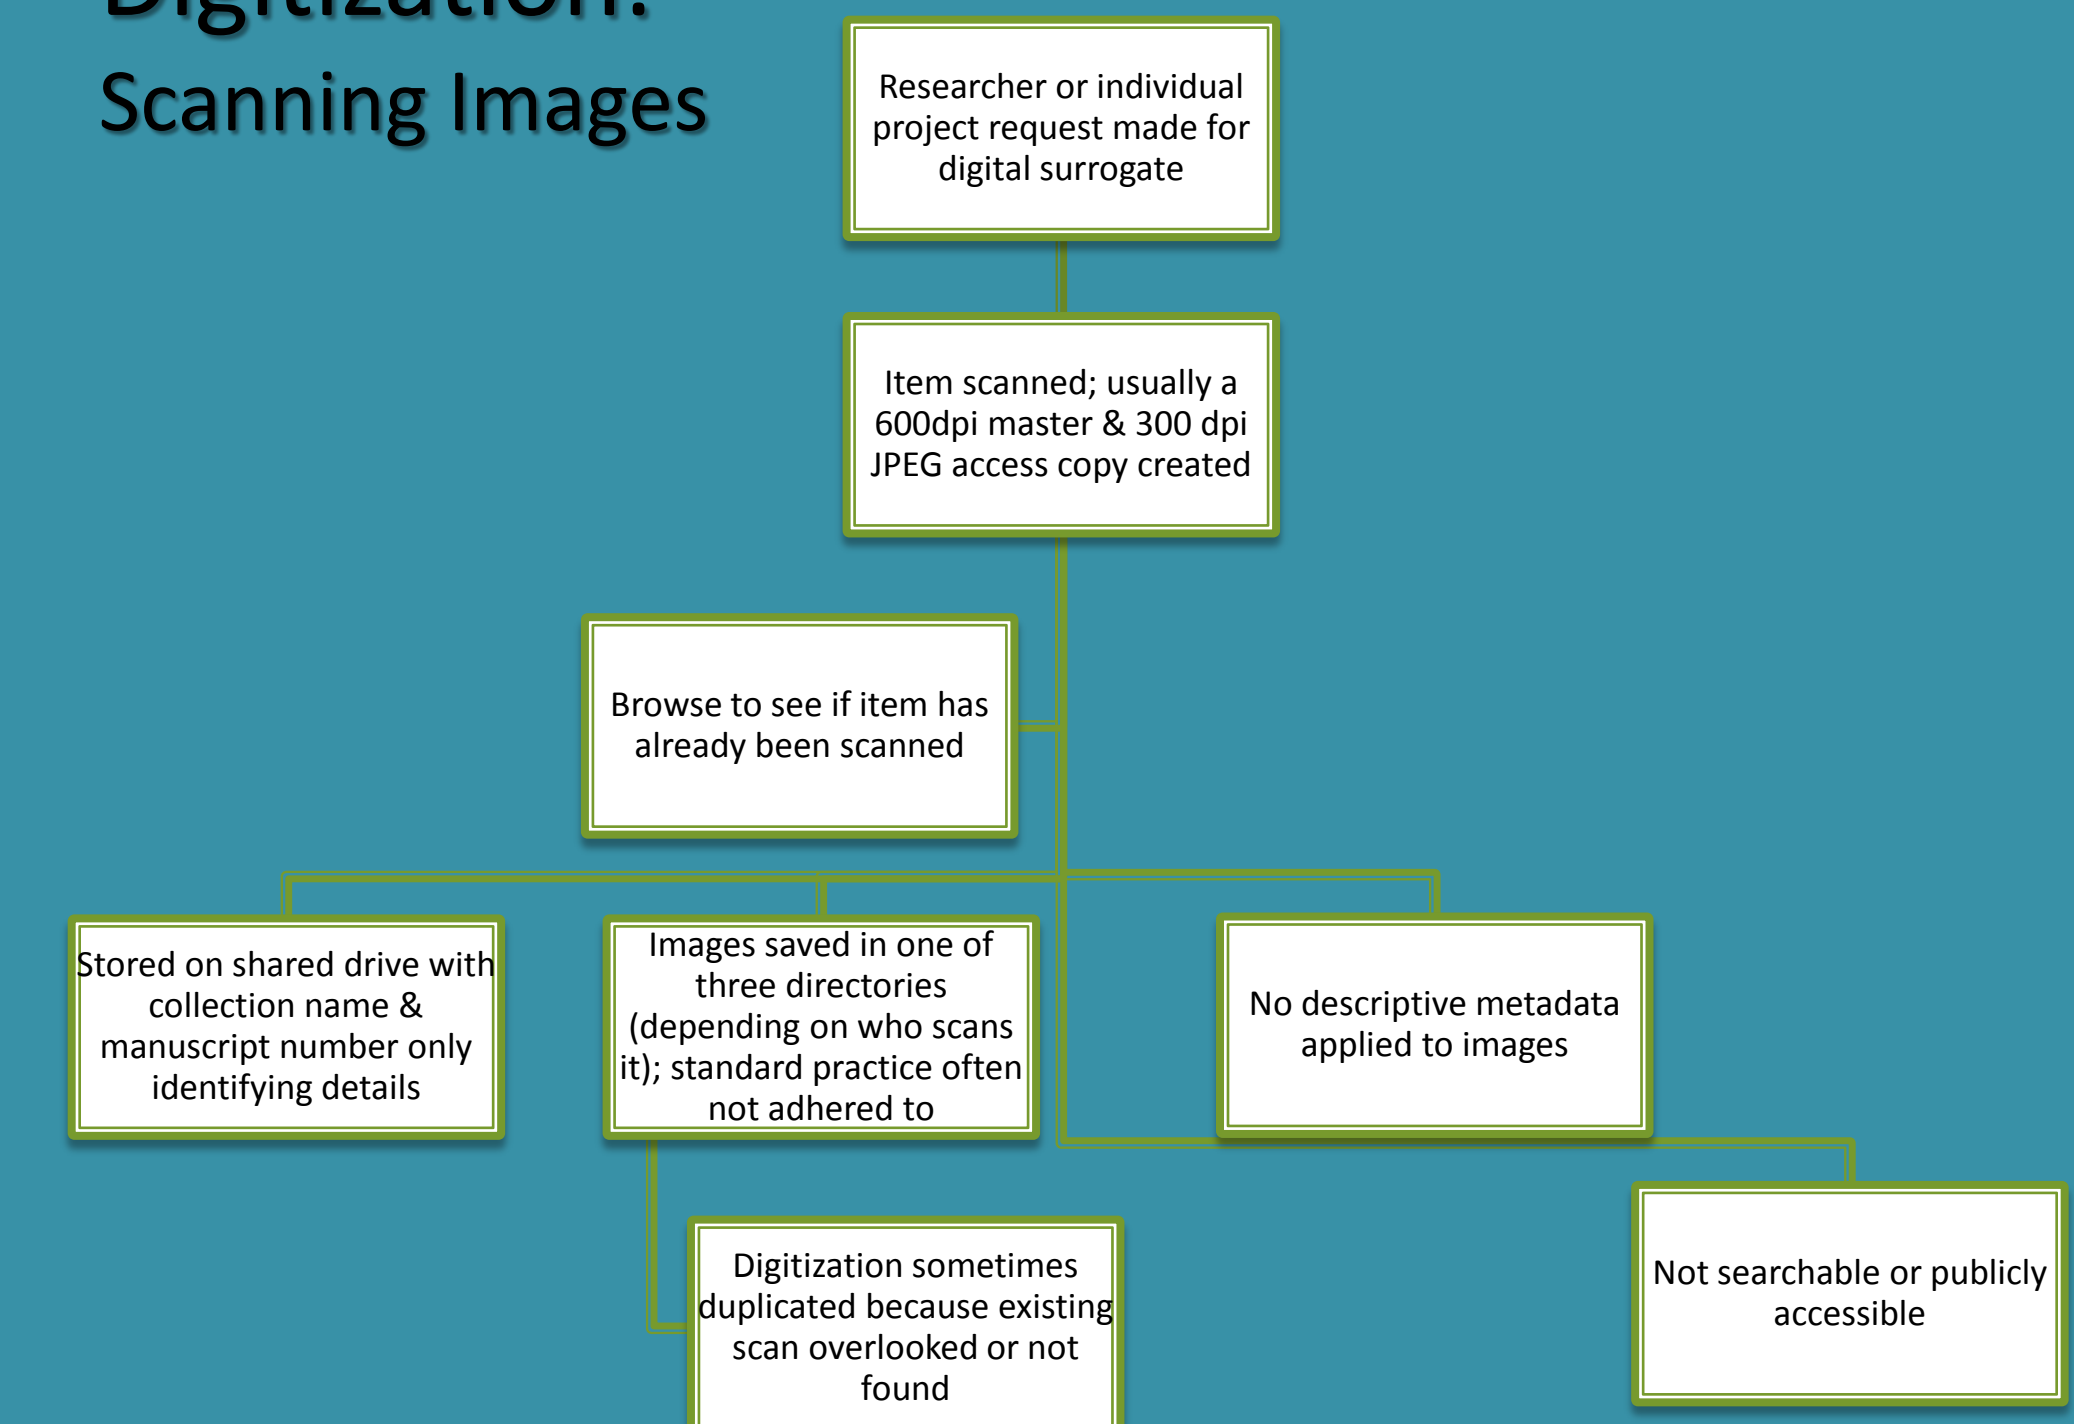

The unique training and workflow procedures devised at Atkins Special Collections can serve as a model for other repositories that seek to refocus and expand upon the professional efforts of existing staff while also providing comprehensive access to previously hidden rare and unique materials.

Old Workflows

Manuscript Finding Aids: Online Access

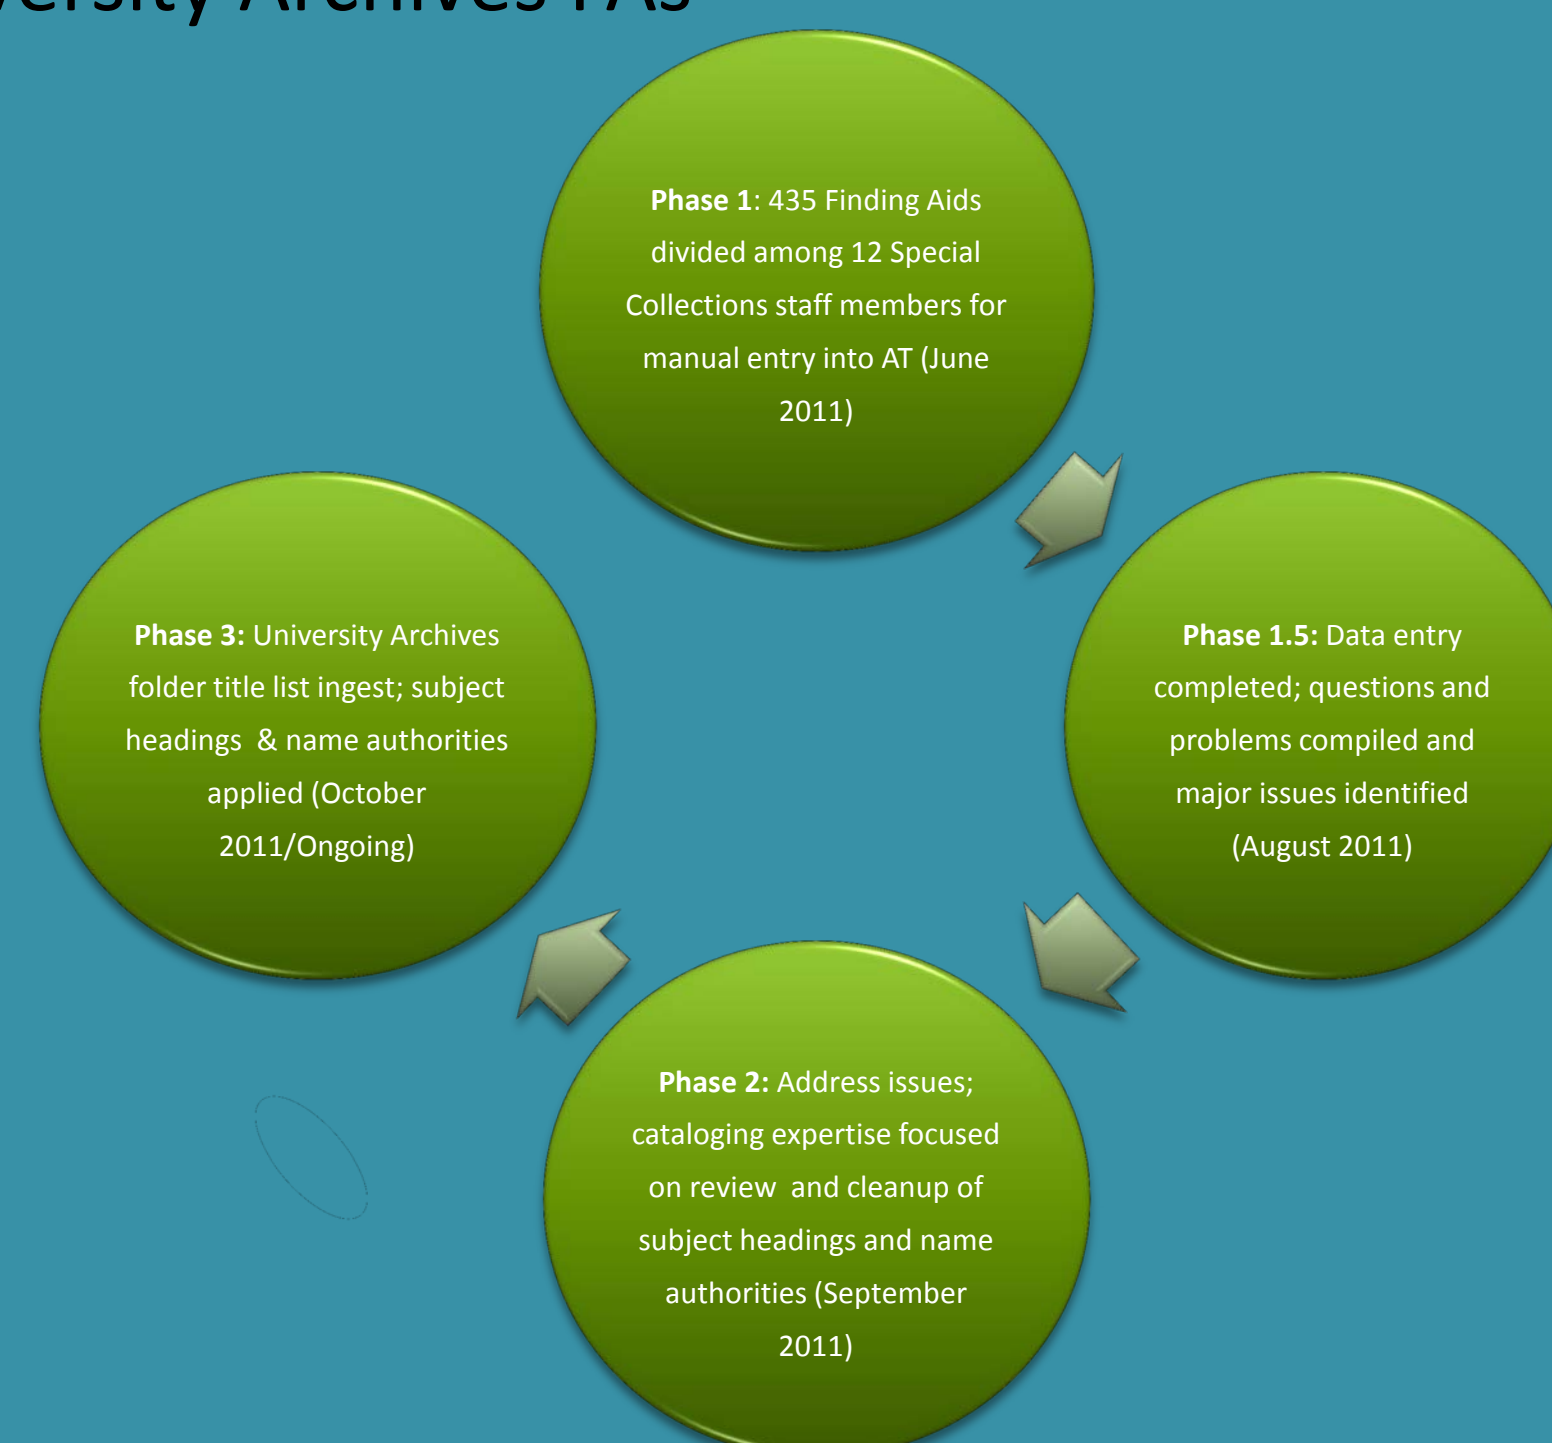

Digitization: Scanning Images

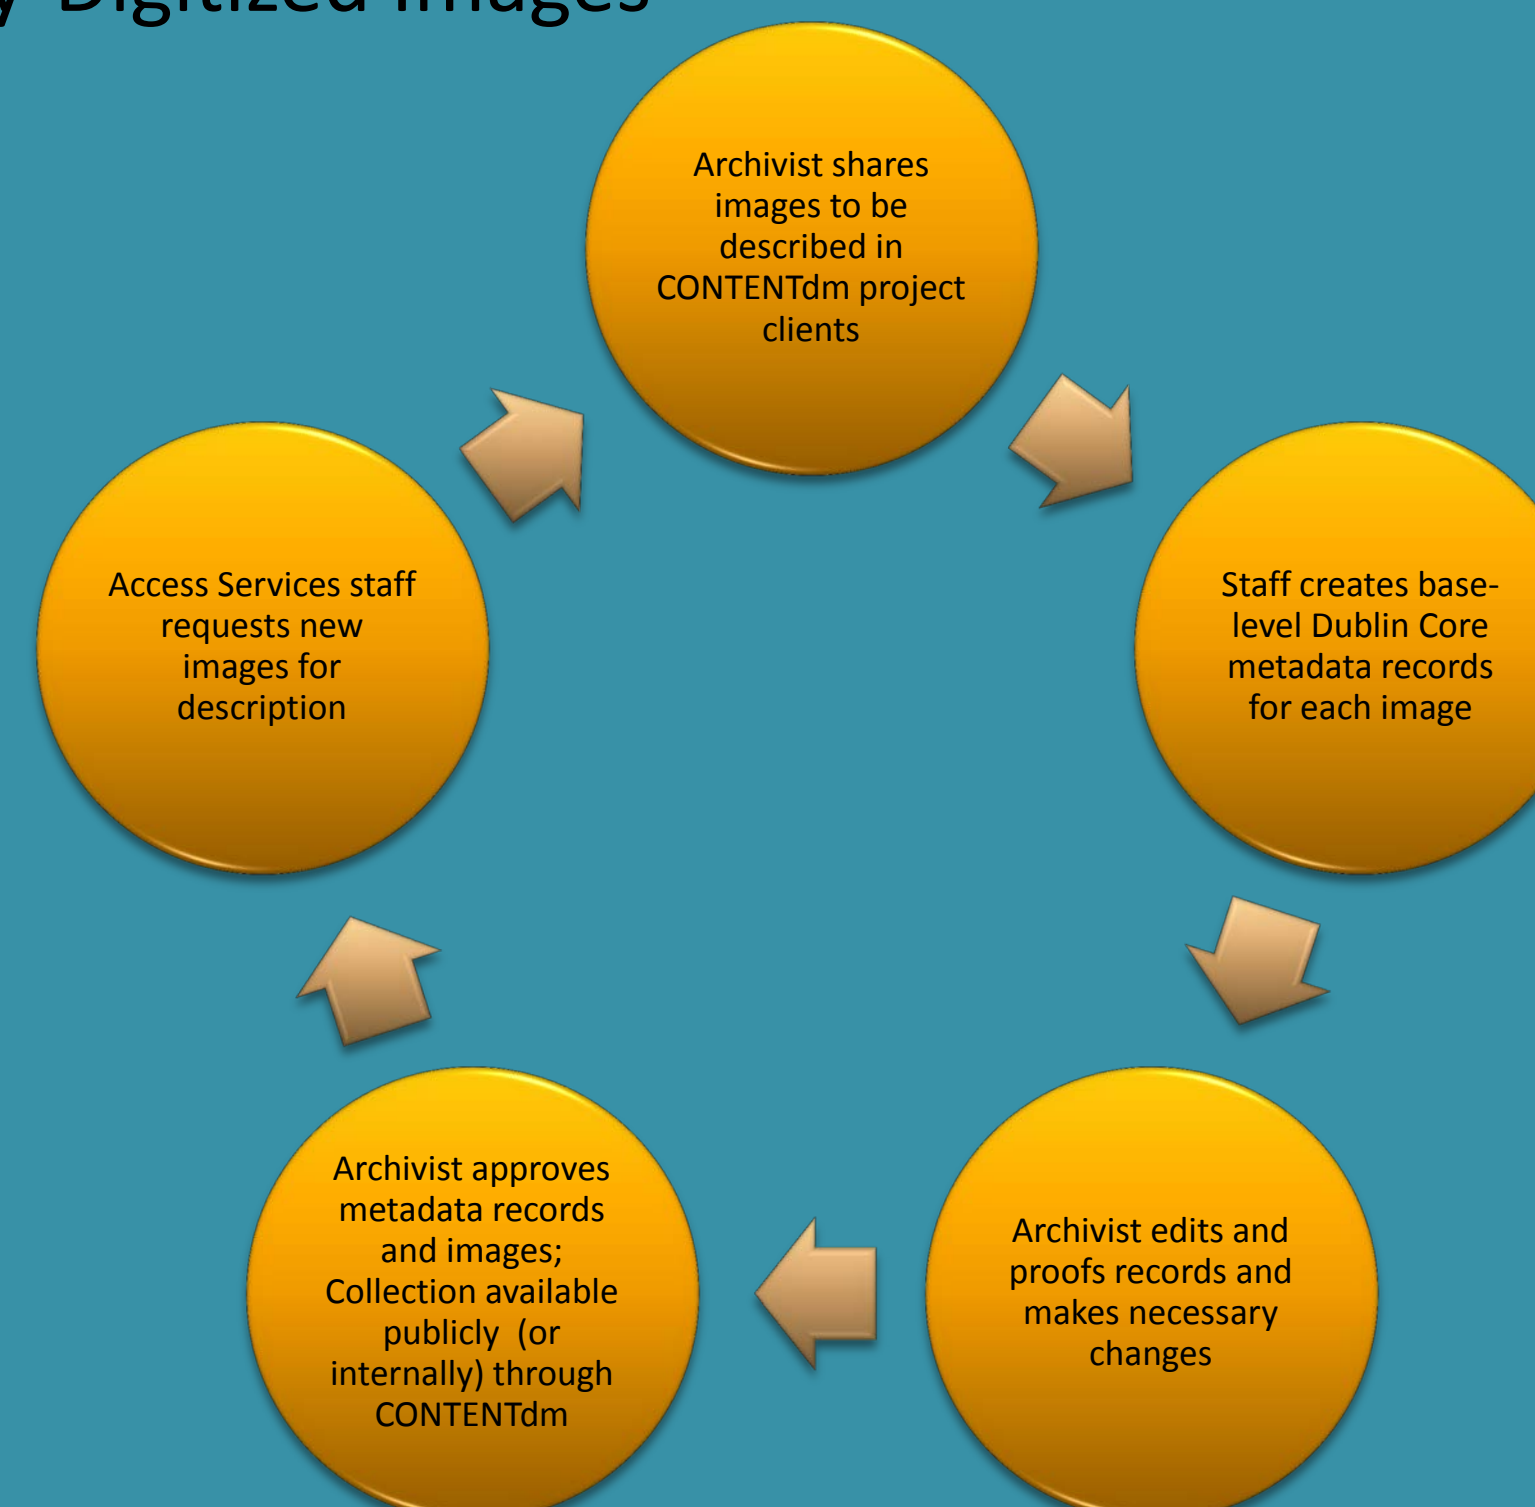

New Workflows

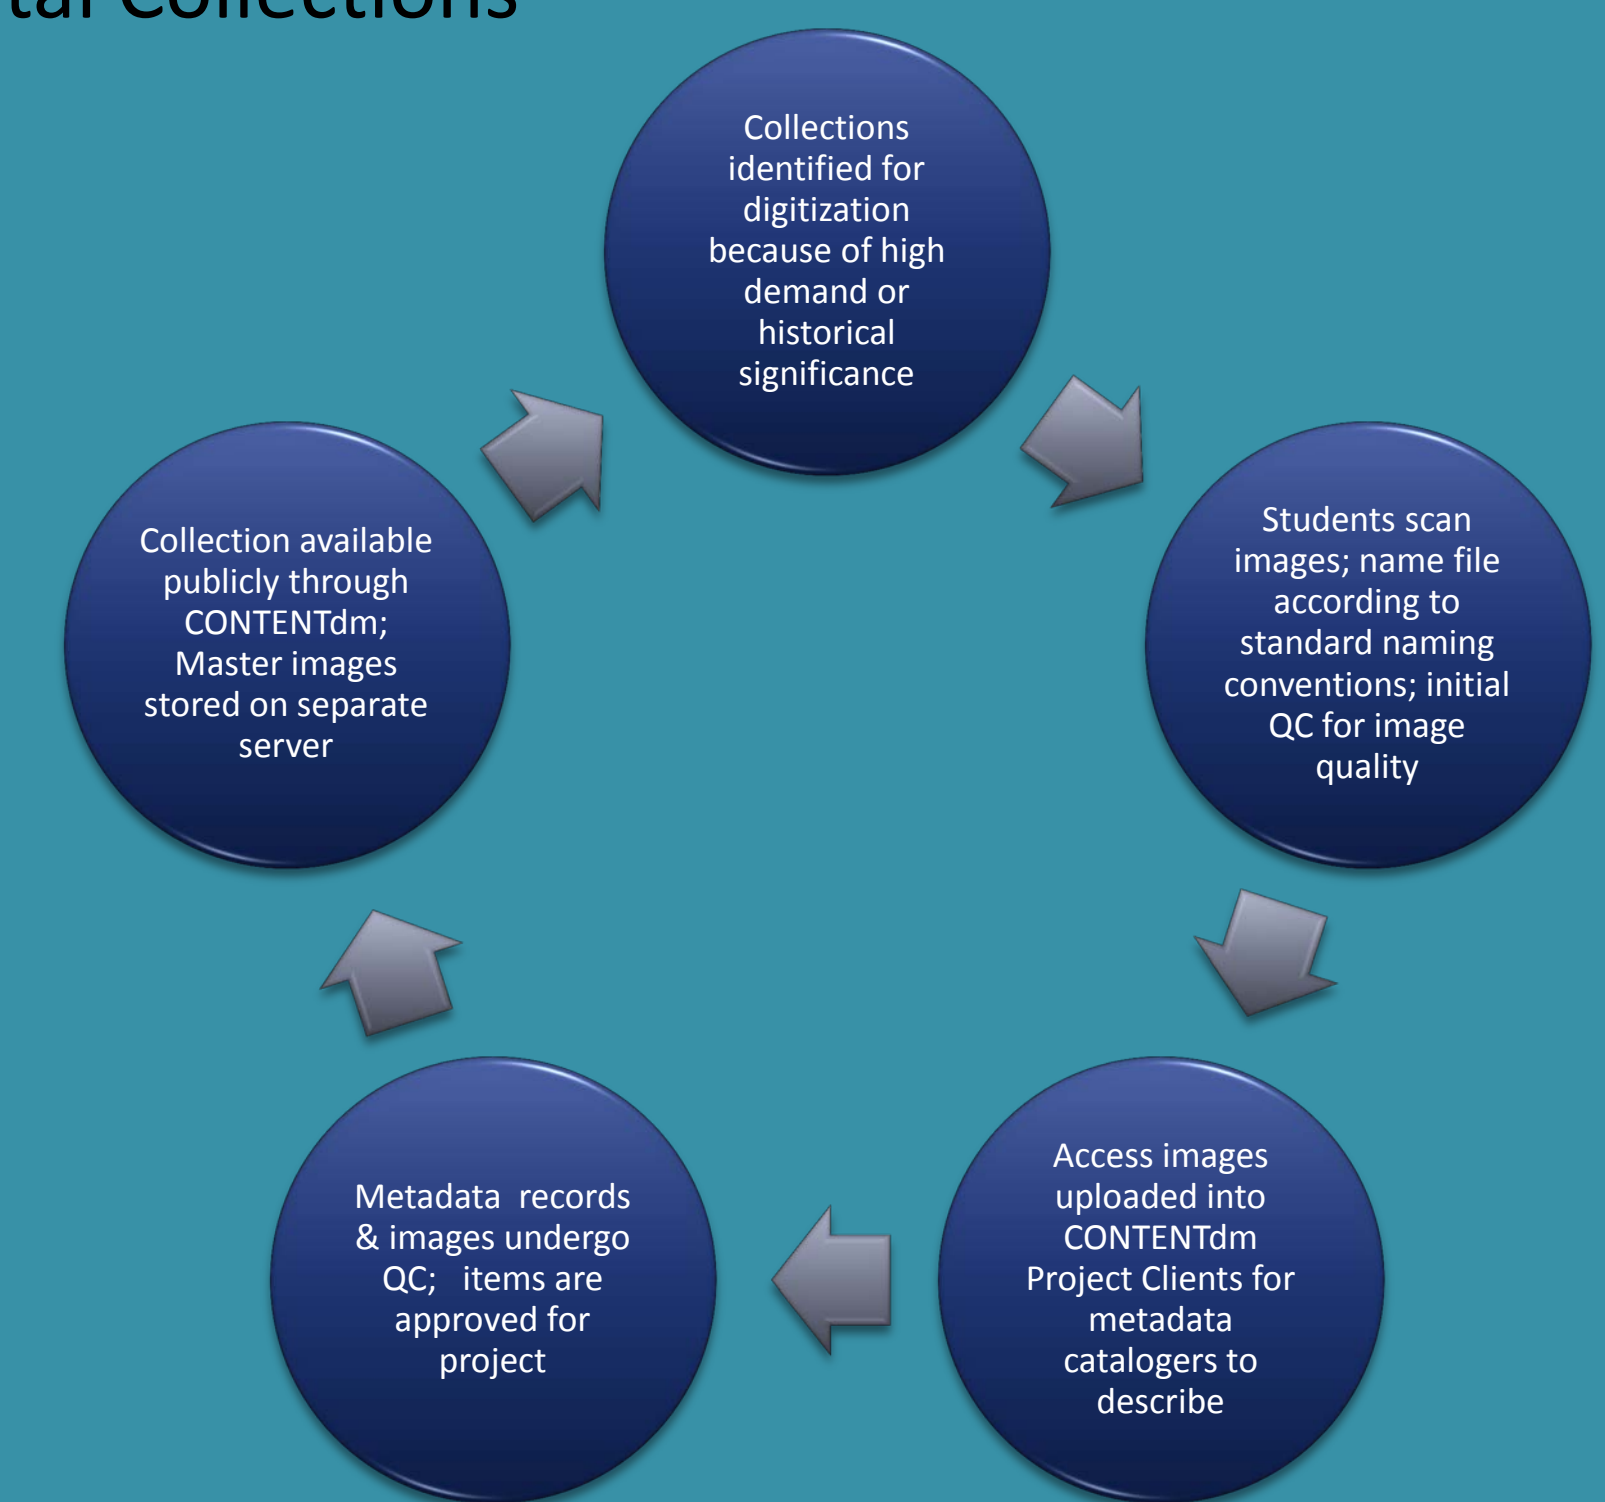

Archivists' Toolkit: Manuscript Collections & University Archives FAs

Tackling the Backlog: Describing Already-Digitized Images

Creating Collections: New Digital Collections

FUTURE PLANS

- Rethink online finding aid access – redesign interface to allow for more robust searching capability
- Continue to develop descriptive expertise for rare and unique materials using non-MARC metadata
- Take workflows beyond library walls – collaborate with university and community partners to increase access to materials

Kristy L. Dixon
Digital Programs Archivist
Atkins Library, UNC Charlotte

Katie McCormick
AUL for Special Collections
Atkins Library, UNC Charlotte

For details, visit <http://guides.library.uncc.edu/backlog>

UNC CHARLOTTE